The learned Counsel for the defendant-respondent has referred to a decision in Hoolas Koeree v. Dihee Sufeehun (2) but that decision proceeded on several grounds, any one of which would have been fatal to the entertainment of the cross-objection. The cross-objection sought to be filed in that case was an oral objection, unaccompanied by a written memorandum of the grounds of such objection or by the Court-fee required by Law to be paid thereon. The language of section 348 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act VIII of 1859) then in force was moreover not the same as that of O. XLI, r. 22 of the present Code. The latter clearly lays down that the omission to file an appeal from any part of the decree shall be no bar to the filing of a cross-objection about that part, much less mere filing of an appeal about one part bar the filing of a cross-objection about another and a separate part of the decree, though the subsequent decision of the former in some cases directly or indirectly affect the decision of the latter.

This appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the case remanded to the lower Appellate Court with a direction to re-admit the cross-objection under its original number and dispose of it in the manner provided by law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiffs' appeal. One Surajbali was the owner of the properties in suit. He died on the 4th May 1919. He was married twice. By his first wife was born Sami Dayal, plaintiff No. 1 in this suit. Badri Narain is the son of Sami Dayal and is plaintiff No. 2. Bindeshri Prasad is the son of Badri Narain and is plaintiff No. 3. By his second wife were born his sons Tirbhawan, Lallu Sumran and Hirde Narain. Hirde Narain is dead. The other three are the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. Parmeswar, defendant No. 4, is his son, Mangli Prasad, defendant No. 5, is the son of defendant No. 1, Ramphor, defendant No. 6 and Ram Pargat, defendant No. 7, are the sons of defendant No. 2. Mata Prasad, defendant No. 8, is the son of defendant No. 3. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was a claim for partition of the properties which belonged to Surajbali and were stated specifically in the lists attached to the plaint. The plaintiffs claimed a half share in those properties, admitting the title to the other half of the defendants to the suit. The ground on which one half share was claimed by the plaintiffs was that there existed a custom in the family according to which the distribution of patrimony was regulated amongst the descendants of the propositus by the number of the wives of the deceased; in other words, the descendants of the first wife, according to that custom, would be entitled to one half and the descendants of the second wife would be entitled to the other half, it being immaterial what the number of the descendants of either of the two wives is.

SAMI DAYAL v. TIRBHAWAN

On the 7th June 1919, three applications were made by the defendant No. 1, for mutation of names in respect of the properties of Surajbali, stating that all the descendants of Surajbali were entitled to those properties in accordance with the Hindu Law. This, of course, had the effect of making the plaintiff No. 1's share only one-fifth in the properties of his father, the remaining four-fifths would on the same ground belong to the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in equal shares (Exs. A1, A4 and A7). On the 26th June 1919, plaintiff No. 1 filed objections in respect of these applications for mutation. By these objections he set up the custom already mentioned (Exs. A2, A5 and A8). Thus a controversy arose amongst these persons as to the distribution of the inheritance which had devolved on them either by survivorship or by right of inheritance in the estate of their deceased father. On the 17th July 1919, however, the dispute was settled by amicable settlement. Three petitions of compromise were filed before the Naib Tehsildar, who had the seizin of the mutation proceedings. The parties to each of these petitions were plaintiff No. 1 and the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 (Exs. A3, A6 and A9). Three days before the final order was recorded by the Naib Tehsildar, the plaintiff No. 1 repudiated the compromise. In what terms this repudiation was made there is not much on the record to tell. All that we find is a cursory reference in the Tehsildar's report dated the 31st July 1919 (Ex. 8). In this report it is said that Sami Dayal objected to the compromise on the ground that he had been deceived into it. Mutation was, however, ordered in accordance with the terms of the compromise by the Sub-Divisional Officer on the 11th December 1919 (Ex. A10).

According to this compromise, the property was divided according to the Hindu Law in equal shares amongst all the sons of Surajbali, deceased, and 15 bighas of land were allotted to the plaintiff No. 1 in excess of that share. The object of the present suit is to get rid of the compromise and to enforce the partition in accordance with the alleged custom.

As to the compromise, the plaintiffs' case was stated in paragraph 8 of the plaint. Substantially, it is a case of fraud and misrepresentation. The evidence on the point is very scanty indeed. The plaintiff No. 1 went into the witness-box and supported his case. His version is that the settlement arrived at between the parties was one allowing a half share to him in accordance with the custom, the other half being allotted to the defendants and that they were to receive 15 bighas of land in excess of the share so allotted to them. He is an illiterate person. The contents of the petition of compromise were not read over to him and he affixed his thumb impression to it without knowing its contents and under the impression that those contents were of the compromise as were settled in the manner stated by him. The learned Subordinate Judge has disbelieved the story given by the plaintiff No. 1. On the other hand, we have the evidence of the defendant No. 1, in support of the defence which is that the plaintiff No. 1 agreed to the compromise with full knowledge of its terms as disclosed in the petitions. In the circumstances, it is not possible to accept the evidence of either of the two most interested persons in the litigation as sufficient for finding out the truth of the matter. The only evidence which can be characterised as of an independent character is that of the Naib Registration Qanungo, the official who acted as a reader to the Naib Tehsildar in the mutation proceedings when they were pending before him. I will quote here a passage from the statement of this witness. "The parties to the compromise were told the contents of the compromise which were read to them by me and I asked them whether they agreed to the terms in them. This was done in the presence of the Naib Tahsildar aforesaid. All the parties to the compromise said that they agreed to the terms of the compromise and then their signatures were obtained by way of verification to the said compromise The plaintiff No. 1 was present at the time. He made his thumb impression on the back of the petitions of compromise by way of verification." This statement as to the events that happened in respect of these petitions of compromise has been accepted as true by the learned Subordinate Judge and I find no reason to disagree with him on this point. I must hold that the case of fraud and misrepresentation in respect of the compromise fails.

It was argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants that the petitions of compromise were inadmissible in evidence because they were not registered, while they were documents which required to be registered by section 17 (b) of the Registration Act. There is no doubt that these petitions are clearly settlements of dispute which had arisen amongst the descendants of Surajbali in the Revenue Court in respect of the distribution of the properties belonging to him. On the side of the plaintiff a claim was set up for a half share in those properties on the basis of a custom. On the side of the defendants the alleged custom was denied and distribution was claimed according to the Hindu Law. The controversy was brought to a close by an acknowledgment on the part of the parties of the rights of each other in the estate of their deceased father to the extent and in the manner indicated in the petitions of compromise. But for the allotment of 15 bighas of land to the plaintiff No. 1 the distribution was in accordance with the case of the defendants. The allotment might have been made under a belief that the plaintiff being the eldest member of the family was by some arrangement entitled to a slightly greater consideration than that accorded to the other members of the family. It is true that, merely describing these petitions as family settlement or merely holding that in their nature they are family settlement, would not exempt them from the provisions of section 17(b) of the Indian Registration Act if they fall within the terms of that section. This was pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Umrao Singh v. Lachman Singh (1). The present petitions, however, are clearly of a nature which purports or operates neither to create, assign or extinguish any right, title or interest in present or in future in immovable property, nor had they "declared" any such right, title or interest. The true nature of such a settlement was described by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case Lalla (or) Beharee Lal v. Ramee Mewa Koonwer (2) and again in the case of Khunnu Lal v. Gobind Kishna Narain (3) as being acknowledgment of an antecedent title. In this connection, I may usefully refer also to a decision of a Bench of this Court in the case of Satrohan Lal v. Nageshar Prasad (4). The present case is a striking illustration of such an acknowledgment. All the sons of Surajbali, who are parties to this litigation, are entitled to the inheritance in the estate of their deceased father. The only question in controversy was the definition of the interest of each in that inheritance. This definition was made by making the acknowledgment contained in the petitions of compromise. I am, therefore, of opinion that the petitions did not require registration and were rightly admitted in evidence by the learned Subordinate Judge.

On the question of custom, the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the custom set up by the plaintiffs was not established. I have heard the arguments of the learned Advocate for the appellants challenging the propriety of this finding but in view of the opinion which I have formed on the question of compromise I did not hear the respondents' reply on the point of custom.

The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Pilibhit, dated the 9th of December 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case certain issues were remitted by this Court on the 21st of June 1923. The effect of the findings on those issues is that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession of the disputed land and for the removal of the construction made thereon by the defendants. The people of the village have evidently been using the land as a threshing floor for some time past. It was recorded as kharmangat or threshing floor in the khassa prepared at the last Settlement. They had, however, no right to construct an enclosure thereon and thereby to appropriate the whole land to their exclusive use. As held in Chatterpal v. Gajadhar Upadhyia (1), a tenant cannot enclose and construct a house upon a plot of open land in the abadi without the consent of the landlord, though he may have been using it for temporary purposes for a long time.

The appeal is, therefore, allowed and the claim of the plaintiff decreed for possession of the disputed land and for the removal of the structures built thereon by the defendants with costs here and hitherto. The defendants will be entitled to remove the materials of the construction which they have made. The right of the defendants to use the land as a threshing floor in common with the other tenants of the village will remain unaffected. The defendants will bear their own costs throughout.

SUKHDEODAS REKHABDAS v. TRIKUMDAS CALLIANJI

Defendant first party sold certain property to defendants second party and a sum of three lakhs was left with the vendee to pay off a mortgage on the property. It was stipulated that if the mortgage amount turned out to be less than three lakhs the balance should be paid to the vendor. Plaintiff filed a suit against the defendants to recover a certain amount which he alleged was the balance of the unpaid purchase-money in respect of the same property which he had sold to defendant first party. He made an application under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code for attachment before judgment of the sum of three lakhs which was in the hands of the defendants second party. The application did not contain the allegations necessary to bring it under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, but the affidavit accompanying it contained the requisite averments. The trial Court granted the application. Both sets of defendants appealed;

Held (1) that although the application was not in proper form the defect was cured by the affidavit accompanying the application;

(2) that as the defendants second party were prevented by the order complained of from paying the money even to the mortgagees and were likely to be prejudiced by the order, their appeal was maintainable;

(3) that the interest of defendant first party in the sum of three lakhs in the hands of defendants second party was a merely contingent interest which was not liable to attachment under section 60 (m) of the Civil Procedure Code, and the order of the trial Court must, therefore, be set aside.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are directed against an order passed by the Court below under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, attaching before judgment a sum of 3 lacs of rupees alleged to be due to defendant No. 1 from defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The facts of the case relevant to the present enquiry may be shortly stated thus :—The defendant No. 1 sold to defendants Nos. 2 to 4 (who may be shortly called the Rampurias) a certain mill called Callian Cotton Mills for Rs. 5 lacs by an Indenture dated the 21st July 1921. The mill was under mortgage to one Manik Lal Mansukbbhai and the sale was subject to the mortgage. On the same day an agreement was entered into between defendant No. 1 and the Rampurias under which the Rampurias bound themselves to pay half the charge which was estimated at Rs. 3 lacs and if the amount they had to pay to the mortgagee was less than that sum, or nothing at all, they would pay to defendant No. 1 the said sum of Rs. 3 lacs or the balance thereof less the sum paid to the mortgagee and if the sum payable to the mortgagee exceeded Rs. 3 lacs the purchasers would bear the excess. Previous to the sale, Manik Lal had brought a suit on his mortgage against the plaintiff and others and the Rampurias were subsequently added as defendants. The defendants have pleaded payment and the suit is still pending. Subsequent to the sale, the plaintiff instituted a suit against the defendant No. 1 and the Rampurias for recovery of the alleged balance of the consideration money of the sale of the said Mill by the plaintiff to defendant No. 1 and for the further relief that the amount found to be due to plaintiff from the defendant be declared a charge on the said Mill as the lien of an unpaid vendor. In this suit, which is pending in the 3rd Court of the Subordinate Judge at Hooghly, the plaintiff applied to attach before judgment the sum of Rs. 3 lacs above-mentioned in the hands of the Rampuria defendants. On 7th June 1922, the Court below allowed the application and ordered the attachment. On 12th June the order was served on the Rampuria defendants and on 24th June they applied for a reconsideration of the order on the ground that it was passed in their absence and that it was an improper order. That application was rejected. The defendants have, therefore, preferred these two appeals against the order of the 7th June, 1922, Appeal No. 226 being by the first defendant Sukhdeo Das Rekhadas and Appeal No. 303 by the Rampuria defendants. Both the appeals raise the same questions and are treated as analogous.

SUKHDEODAS REKHABDAS v. TRIKUMDAS CALLIANJI

A preliminary objection has been taken by Sir Benode Mitter who appears for the plaintiff in Appeal No. 303 to the competency of the appeal by the Rampuria defendants. It is argued that a garnishee cannot appeal against a garnishee order under the Civil Procedure Code; he acquires a locus standi when the debt is sold in execution of the decree and the claim is sought to be enforced against him. It is not necessary to consider this question in the abstract, for in the present case the appellants are also defendants in the suit. It may safely be said that, when a party to a suit feels himself aggrieved by a decree or an order from which he has a right of appeal the question as to whether the decree or order appealed from is to be revised at his instance, he not being materially affected by it, is one for the Appellate Court to decide at the hearing of the appeal. It is urged by the learned Counsel that the Rampuria defendants are not affected by the order complained against, for, if the debt is not due by them, the order does not touch them and, if it is due, the order is a just and proper one and they cannot object to the payment of the money to any one to whom the Court directs them to pay. We do not think that this contention is well-founded. According to the plaintiffs' case these defendants have retained this sum of Rs. 3 lacs for payment to the mortgagee if any amount is found due to him. The order of attachment that has been served upon them prohibits them from paying that amount to any one, the effect of the order being that, in the event of the mortgagee securing a decree in his suit, the defendants will be unable to satisfy it and probably thereby prevent the sale of the Mill and of their other properties in execution of that decree. We accordingly hold that the appeal by defendants Nos. 2 to 4 is maintainable as they are parties to the suit and are thus affected by the order appealed from. It seems to us, however, that this question is not of much practical importance as the appeal by the defendant No. 1 whose right of appeal is unquestionable, will decide the same questions as are raised in the appeal by defendants Nos. 2 to 4.

The points raised in these appeals are, first, that the application made for attachment before judgment does not disclose facts on which an order under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 can be passed and, secondly, that the money which has been attached is not a debt due to the defendant No. 1 within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 46. There are other minor objections taken which will be noticed in the course of the judgment.

With reference to the first question, no doubt, the petition filed by the plaintiff on 31st March 1922 does not contain the allegations necessary to bring it under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, but the affidavit accompanying it sworn by the plaintiff contains the requisite averments and we do not think that this contention is of much substance.

The second point, however, is more substantial and requires close examination. The indenture by which the defendant No. 1 sold the Mill to the Rampuria defendants recites the consideration as Rs. 5 lacs subject to the mortgage of Manik Lal Mansukhbhai. It is, on the face of it, a sale of the equity of redemption for Rs. 5 lacs. There is an agreement of the same date by which the Rampurias agree to pay to the defendant No. 1 any sum that may be left in their hands after satisfying the mortgage-decree if it is not for more than Rs. 3 lacs. On the documents placed before us, it is evident that this agreement, though contemporaneous, did not form a part consideration of the sale of the property which was only the equity of redemption. It is significant that no mention of it is made in the deed of conveyance. Our attention has been drawn to a statement made by defendant No. 4 in an affidavit that the Rampurias have purchased the property for Rs. 8 lacs. It may be assumed to be correct in one sense, namely, that that is the value of the entire interest in the property without the encumbrance. Besides, such a statement cannot vary or supersede the contract embodied in solemn deeds. We are, therefore, of opinion that the sum of Rs. 3 lacs does not form a part of the consideration of the sale and the defendant No. 1 has no interest in it under the contract of sale.

It is argued by the appellants that the sum attached is not a debt as it is indefinite, unascertained and contingent on the happening of an event in the future. In our judgment this contention ought to succeed. It is not an amount in which the defendant No. 1 has a vested interest in presenti of which the payment is deferred to a future time. In O'Driscoll v. Manchester Insurance Committee (1) Bankes, L. J., quotes with approval the law on the subject stated in the Annual Practice—"But the distinction must be borne in mind between the case where there is an existing debt, payment whereof is deferred, and the case where both the debt and its payment rest in the future. In the former case there is an attachable debt, in the latter case there is not." The law, as we gather from authorities, is that a debt, in order to be attachable, need not be ascertained but must be accruing or have accrued, a de'itum in presenti solvendum in futuro. Looking at the facts of the present case in the light of the law as above stated, we are of opinion that the interest of the defendant No. 1 has not yet accrued in the money attached or in any portion of it and is not, therefore, an attachable debt. Reference may be made in this connection to the case of Hutt v. Shaw (2), where a certain sum of money was deposited with a stock-broker as 'cover' for any loss upon speculations in stocks and shares. It was held that it was not a debt due or accruing to the judgment-debtor, Lord Esher, M. R., observes:—"This sum was not in the hands of Shaw to be re-paid on demand. When the Garnishee Order Nisi was served the accounts were not settled." The present case is stronger in favour of the garnishee than Hutt's case. There the money belonged to the judgment-debtor and he had deposited it with the garnishee as 'cover' for certain speculative transactions. In the case before us, as we have observed, neither the sum of Rs. 3 lacs nor any portion of it belongs to the defendant No. 1 nor has he any present interest in it. On the facts of this case, the same considerations on which un-accrued maintenance or unearned salary is held unattachable ought to apply and the principle of law on which the cases Syud Tuffuzool Hossein Khan v. Rughoonath Pershad (3), Haridas Acharya Choudhury v. Baroda Kishore Acharya Choudhury (4), and Oher Singh v. Sriram (5), were decided should govern the present case. The conclusion we have arrived at is, that the defendant No. 1 has at the most a contingent claim in this sum of Rs. 3 lacs which is not liable to attachment under section 60, clause (m), Civil Procedure Code. We observe that the learned Subordinate Judge has not considered this question, though it was raised before him, and we have not the advantage of his view on the point.

The order of attachment is also defective in other ways. In the first place, it restrains the Rampurias from paying the amount to any one not even excepting the mortgagee. This is in contravention of the terms of the contract between them and the defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff as an attaching creditor cannot have a right which the defendant No. 1 did not possess. Further, the agreement provides that the Rampuria defendants will contest the claim of the mortgagee up to the final Court of Appeal as the defendant No. 1 may direct, at the cost and expense of the latter. They will presumably be entitled to reimburse themselves from any sum that may be available to the defendant No. 1 out of the sum of Rs. 3 lacs. So, in no event, will the entire sum of Rs. 3 lacs be available to the defendant No. 1.

We may mention that the mortgagee Manick Lal has claimed a sum of Rs. 3 lacs and 17 thousand due on his mortgage in the suit brought by him. The plaintiff as a defendant in that suit pleaded payment of the entire amount and the other defendants also have taken the same defence. Subsequent to the order of attachment from which this appeal arises, the plaintiff filed an application in Manick Lal's suit not only withdrawing his defence but also praying that a decree for the amount claimed might be passed in favour of Manick Lal. plaintiff urges that as a Court of Appeal we are not entitled to take notice of this fact which has happened subsequent to the order appealed from. In the view we take on other points it is not necessary for us to consider this question but we are inclined to the view that we are justified in taking cognizance of a fact which materially affects the rights of the parties to an appeal.

In accordance with the above observations the appeals are allowed and the order of the Court below, dated the 7th June 1922, is set aside. The attachment made under that order is withdrawn. The appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court which we assess at 5 gold mohurs in each appeal.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. II, r. 4—Mortgage—Redemption suit—Persons claiming paramount title, whether can be joined as defendants.

Although it is, as a general rule, desirable in mortgage-suits to exclude all issues between the parties except those immediately concerned with the mortgage-suit itself, the Court may, in certain cases, if it thinks fit, allow other issues to be determined in such a suit, even if they depend upon separate causes of action. Under O. II, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code a plaintiff in a redemption suit may ask to be put in possession of the mortgaged property, and where the defendants raising a paramount title are those in possession of the property and likely hereafter, if their differences are not settled by the mortgage-suit, to resist the possession of the plaintiff, it would, in many cases, be very convenient to allow the issues which have been raised, to be determined in the mortgage-suit so that after determination of those issues the plaintiff may know whether he will or will not get undisturbed possession of the property instead of having to bring a separate suit later on.

JUDGMENT.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross overruling the decision of the District Judge.

The suit was instituted by the plaintiff to redeem a zarpeshgi mortgage granted to the defendants Nos. 1 to 9 in the suit in the year 1898. The facts which gave rise to the subject-matter of the present appeal may be shortly stated. In mauza Kiritpur Yusufpur there was a separate patti consisting of a 2-annas 6-pies share. One-third of this belonged to two persons named Ambica Singh and Jagdam Singh, the remainder being held by other co-sharers with whom we are not concerned. In 1895 the two persons named granted a zarpeshgi mortgage of their one-third share to certain persons who are now represented by the defendants Nos. 1 to 9 and they entered into possession. The plaintiff subsequently purchased the whole proprietary interest in the 2-annas 6-pies patti including the one-third share the subject of the mortgage. In 1918 the plaintiff brought the present suit seeking to redeem the mortgage and obtain possession of the property upon paying the sum found due on taking an account. In addition to the zarpeshgidars certain other persons, now the defendants Nos. 10 to 14, were impleaded as defendants although no specific relief was claimed as against them. With regard to them it was alleged in the plaint that they had been recorded by the zarpeshgidars as tenants of certain lands in the direct possession of the zarpeshgidars although in fact they had acquired no interest therein as tenants and that the entries so recorded were false. These defendants may be referred to as the tenant defendants. There was no particular reason why in a suit for redemption the Court should determine any issue relating to the status of the tenants defendants. Any right they might assert as tenants might properly have been determined in a subsequent suit. On the other hand, if they appeared and contested the allegations set out in the plaint, as in fact they did and set up a paramount title and if issues were framed with their concurrence as in fact happened I hardly think that they could afterwards object to this course if the issues should be decided against them. The fifth issue framed was to this effect:—

"Have the defendants Nos. 12 to 16" (now re-numbered the defendants Nos. 10 to 14) "any concern with the lands in suit and have they got any title to the same."

The Munsif before whom the case came for trial found in favour of the plaintiff's claim for redemption and ordered the sarpeshgidar defendants to make over possession to the plaintiff of the mortgaged property free from all incumbrances if within three months the entire mortgage-money should be paid. He also found with regard to the fifth issue that the tenant defendants had no rights in the lands claimed by them and he decided the issue against them.

The tenant defendants appealed to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal. He was of opinion that the tenant defendants were properly impleaded under the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code as persons having an interest or claiming to have an interest in the mortgage-security. He was further of opinion that the plaintiff was right in making the tenant defendants parties thus avoiding multiplicity of suits, and that the trial Court was competent to decide the issue. On the merits, he agreed with the conclusions arrived at by the trial Court.

From this decision a second appeal was preferred to this Court and was heard before Mr. Justice Ross. The learned Judge overruled the decision of the District Judge, being of opinion that the tenant defendants were not proper parties to a suit instituted by the plaintiff against other defendants to redeem a sarpeshgi mortgage and that the issues which were raised between the plaintiff and the tenant defendants were not germane to the issues in the present suit. The learned Judge was apparently much impressed by a series of cases in which it has been laid down that, in a mortgage-suit questions which may be raised by the defendants asserting a paramount title to the mortgaged-property are not proper questions to have determined in a mortgage-suit and no doubt, in so far as a rule exists to that effect, it is a very salutary rule because it is obvious that the matters which have to be decided in a mortgage-suit are entirely separate from any questions which may arise between the plaintiff in the suit and defendants who may be asserting a paramount title and if the two matters are allowed to be tried together embarrassment and great inconvenience may arise. In fact it is provided by O. II, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code that no cause of action shall, unless with the leave of the Court, be joined with a suit for the recovery of immoveable property except in certain cases which are not material to the present dispute and there is a proviso to that rule which lays down that nothing in this rule shall be deemed to prevent any party in a suit for foreclosure or redemption from asking to be put in possession of the mortgaged-property. Although it is, as a general rule, desirable in mortgage-suits to exclude all issues between the parties except those immediately concerned with the mortgage-suit itself I do not think that it can for a moment be doubted that the Court may, in certain cases, if it should think fit, allow other issues to be determined in such a suit even if they should depend upon separate causes of action, and in fact it seems to me quite clear on reading O. II r. 4, that the Court may, in proper cases, grant leave for that to be done. In the present case I cannot help thinking that if leave had been specifically asked from the Court to allow the issue arising between the present respondents and the plaintiff to be determined in this suit that such leave would have been granted. No formal application such as that referred to in O. II, r. 4, was made but the respondents as defendants did by their written statement set up a claim to be in possession of some of the mortgaged-property as kashit-kars asserting that they had been brought on the land by the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff and had been in possession for a period of over 12 years. It appears, therefore, that they were claiming to be in actual possession of some of the mortgaged property and, looking at the proviso to r. 4 of O. II, it is clear that the plaintiff in a suit for redemption may ask to be put in possession of the mortgaged property. Where the defendants raising a paramount title are those in possession and likely hereafter, if their differences are not settled by the mortgage-suit, to resist the possession of a successful plaintiff in a mortgage-suit, it would in my opinion, in many cases, be very convenient to allow the issues which have been raised to be determined in the mortgage-suit so that, after determination of those issues, the plaintiff will know whether he may or may not get undisturbed possession of the property instead of having to bring a separate suit later on, and in a case like the present I can see nothing embarrassing in allowing these issues to be determined. In any case, it was a matter which was within the discretion of the Court and although, as I have said, no formal request was made for the leave of the Court, nevertheless where both parties are at arm's length, where both parties are setting up varying title to the mortgaged property, one claiming to be in possession and the other claiming that he has no right or title to be there it seems to me that that is just the sort of case in which the Court might well grant leave, and if the parties raise issues such as that which was raised in the present case and the Court acquiesces in that course and allows those issues to be tried, I think it may well be said that the issues were raised with the leave of the Court. But assuming even that there was some irregularity in allowing the question of the status of the defendants to be determined in the present suit then that was an irregularity merely and, on turning to section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code, it seems clear that an irregularity such as that which I have indicated is no ground at all for setting aside the decision of the lower Court on appeal unless the irregularity is one which affects either the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. It has not been suggested in this case, nor could it be successfully contended, that by deciding the point in question in this suit the merits of the case were in any way affected. The parties had every opportunity of giving evidence on the point, they gave evidence, and that evidence was considered and a decision was come to. Further, as I have already indicated, it seems to me that there is nothing in the irregularity, if indeed it be an irregularity, which affects the jurisdiction of the Court, because, as I have already pointed out, under O. 2 r. 4 it is quite clear that the Court would, if it so chose and granted leave, have jurisdiction to determine a question such as this. In these circumstances, it seems to me that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court cannot be supported and should be set aside. If authority were needed for the proposition which I have just stated, it will be found in many cases, three of which alone I need refer to:—Hare Krishna Bhowmik v. Robert Watson & Co. (1) Zakirraza v. Mudhusudan Dass (2) a decision of this Court, and Bhaja Chowdhury v. Chuni Lal Marwari (3). In my opinion the appeal must be allowed, the decision of the learned Judge of this Court must be reversed and the decree of the District Judge should be restored. The plaintiff in this suit is entitled to his costs of this appeal and of the appeal before Mr. Justice Ross.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O XXI rr, 58, 68—Claim proceedings—Title suit—Burden of proof—Appal—Appellate Court, failure of, to mention particular document in judgment, effect of.

SARASWATIBAI v. YADORAO

Where a title-suit is instituted after a summary rejection of an objection under O. XXI, r. 58 of the Civil Procedure Code, the onus to establish that the transaction on which the suit is based was bona fide and for good consideration, lies on the plaintiff.

Where evidence has been adduced by both sides, the question of the burden of proof is of little importance.

The mere fact that a lower Appellate Court has not mentioned a particular document in its judgment, does not justify an inference that it did not take the document into consideration.

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Wardha, in Civil appeal No. 18 of 1921, decided on 31st August 1921.

Mr. Atmaram Bhagwant, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmurti, for the respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in the present case asks for a declaration that the malik makhua field No. 120 of mouza Salod Hirapur is the property of the plaintiff and is not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the Civil Court decree obtained by defendant No. 1 against the defendants Nos. 2 to 4. The plaintiff claimed the property by right of purchase from one Krishnarao under a sale deed, dated the 12th April 1917, for Rs. 500, while the contesting defendant pleaded that the sale was benami for Tukaram and was obtained in order to save the property from his creditors. Plaintiff's story is that the field was really purchased for her by her widowed sister Mst. Mainabai. The first Court held that the field was so purchased by Mst. Mainabai with her separate funds, and not only Tukaram had no interest in it but he was never in possession of the same since the date of the purchase.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court placed before itself the proper points for consideration, viz., whether the field was purchased by Tukaram benami or whether it was purchased by Mst. Mainabai for and in the name of the plaintiff Mst. Saraswatibai and who has been in possession of the said fields since the date of the sale-deed. The Court finds that neither Tukaram's minor son Purshottam or his wife Mst. Saraswatibai, the plaintiff, had separate funds of their own, nor had Mst. Mainabai any such funds, and that they could not, therefore, pay the consideration of the several documents, such as a mortgaged-deed, a deed of lease and several sale-deeds obtained in their names. The defence that one Mahadeo, a servant of Tukaram, the plaintiff's husband, had been cultivating the field in suit as bataidar was held not established. It was further held that Tukaram was in possession of the land in suit ever since the date of the purchase. The decree of the trial Court was reversed and the claim was dismissed. Hence the present appeal.

The first point argued here is that as the objection filed against the attachment was dismissed for default no investigations into its merits were made: Bhimrao v. Martand (1), and that, therefore, the burden of proof has been wrongly laid on the plaintiff. I am not pressed by this argument. It was held in Narayan Ganesh Ghatate v. Bhioraj (2) that if a plaintiff has failed in proceedings under section 278, Civil Procedure Code, the burden of proving in the suit that his purchase of the property was bona fide and for good consideration lies on the plaintiff; and their Lordships of the Privy Council in Seth Ghunsham Das v. Umapershad (3) lay down that when a suit is instituted after the summary rejection of a claim under section 278 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, the onus to establish that the transaction on which the suit is based was entered into in good faith lies on the plaintiff. In a case like the present, where evidence has been adduced by both sides, the question of the burden of proof is of little importance. All the evidence, oral and documentary, has been considered and a result arrived at after such consideration.

It is said that the learned District Judge has failed to properly comprehend the evidence of certain witnesses and has failed to consider the copy Ex, P-1 Jamabandi for 1918-19 as regards possession. The District Judge may not have mentioned the Jamibandi in his judgment, but it does not, therefore, follow that he did not take it into consideration. After all, the findings that Mst. Mainabai had not sufficient money to enter into this transaction of sale and that it was entered into by Tukaram on his own account are questions of pure fact. So is the finding that Tukaram was in possession; and, however wrong such a finding may be, it cannot be a subject of second appeal, and a perusal of the lower Appellate Court's judgment shows me that the Judge had dealt with all the essential points in deciding the case. He has also analysed the evidence and it cannot be said that findings which determine the suit are not warranted by the evidence on record. It seems to me that the appeal is concluded by findings of fact against the appellant and for these reasons, I dismiss this appeal with costs. The appellant will pay the respondents's costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. V, r. 17, O. IX, r. 13—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Due service of summons—Burden of proof—Summons delivered to defendant—Acknowledgment, refusal to give—Procedure—Appeal—New point, whether can be taken.

When a defendant applies to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that the summons was not duly served on him, the onus is on him to establish the absence of due service. [p. 891, col. 1.]

omission of the process-server to obtain the signature of the defendant or to affix a copy of the summons to the door of his house will invalidate it. [p. 891, col. 2.]

Gopaladas Girdhari Lal v. Seyad Ishu, 46 I. C. 277, relied on.

Per Foster J.—Where a defendant upon whom a summons has been served retains the copy that is put into his hands and refuses to give an acknowledgment, he makes it impossible for the peon to affix that copy to the door of his house, and the requirements of r. 17 of O. V of the Civil Procedure Code are complied with. [p. 892, col. 2.]

Although a point of law may be taken in appeal for the first time, it is subject to the rule that the evidence on the record should be complete and no further evidence should be necessary to substantiate the point. [p. 891, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Palaman, dated the 11th January 1923.

Messrs. C. C. Das, S. C. Dey and N. K. Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Permeshwar Dyal, for Mr. Devaki Prasad Sinha, for the Respondent.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge of Palaman, dated the 11th January 1923, refusing to set aside an ex parte decree passed against the defendant.

The main contention of the appellant upon which he seeks to have the decree set aside has been in this Court that the summons of the suit was not "duly served" upon him. This ground of objection was not clearly and definitely taken in the application made by the appellant to have the ex parte decree set aside nor does it appear to have been conspicuously brought out in the evidence at the trial of the case in the Court below. The grounds upon which the petition to set aside the ex parte decree was founded were as follows:—

- (1) That the petitioner had no knowledge of the institution of the suit by the opposite party nor did he receive any summons in the suit nor did any peon go to him with the summons, and
- (2) that the opposite party, by taking surreptitious proceedings, fraudulently and cunningly obtained the ex parte decree which caused serious loss to the petitioner.

NAGISHWAR BUX RAI v. BISSESWAR DAYAL SINGH

These allegations were denied seriatim by the respondent in his petition of the 23rd November 1922. It was there alleged that the appellant had full knowledge of the suit and had received the summons but did not attend the Court. The opposite party further asserted that the summons was duly served. Both parties went into evidence. The peon who is said to have served the summons was examined as a witness on behalf of the respondent. He stated that he made over the summons and a copy of the plaint to the defendant who was personally known to him and asked him to give a receipt, but the defendant refused to do so. Thereupon he asked the Chaukidar to witness the service and the Chaukidar gave his thumb impression on the back of the summons (Exhibit C). The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the evidence of the peon and held that the summons with the copy of the plaint was handed over to the defendant who declined to give a receipt for the same. He disbelieved the defendant's story of his absence from his place of residence on the day the summons is said to have been served. Upon the aforesaid finding, he dismissed the application of the appellant and refused to set aside the decree.

The learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant has criticised the evidence of the peon and has asked us to reject it as being unreliable. We have considered the entire proceedings connected with the suit from the time that it was launched in Court on the 9th May 1922 up to the time that the ex parte decree was passed. We have also considered the evidence adduced on behalf of the applicant. We have not the least doubt that the appellant knew of the institution of the suit against him. The suit was originally instituted against his father after a preliminary dispute between him and the plaintiff in a Criminal Court arising out of the mortgage transaction in question. The original defendant, however, died and in his place the appellant, his son, was substituted on the 17th of June 1922. At that time the Am Mukhtear of the appellant's father was Munshi Nauranglal and it was upon the information given by him that the peon reported to the death of the original defendant Bhagwat Bux Rai. Therefore the Am Mukhtear, whose duty it was to look after the litigation of the estate in Courts, knew of the institution of the suit and he must have in the regular course of his duty informed the appellant, who succeeded to the estate on the death of his father, of the suit brought against him. There are circumstances which lend support to the evidence of the peon that the service was bona fide and that the denial of the appellant of all knowledge of the suit is untrue. Therefore, we are not prepared to differ from the estimate of the evidence made by the trial Court who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses before it, and accordingly we accept its finding of fact that the summons with a copy of the plaint was delivered to the appellant and he refused to give a receipt for the same. Therefore, the issue upon which the parties went to trial in the Court below must be found against the appellant.

The learned Counsel on behalf of the appellant, however, contends that the determination of that issue does not settle the case, inasmuch as upon the facts elicited during the trial of the case it is apparent that the summons was not "duly served" and, consequently, it is urged that the appellant is entitled to have the decree set aside under O. IX, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. That rule lays down that an ex parte decree shall be set aside upon the defendant (1) satisfying the Court that the "summons was not duly served" or (2) "that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing." The latter ground has been concluded by the finding of the Court below referred to above which we have accepted as a correct finding.

The question now raised for the first time before us by the appellant is, therefore, confined to the first ground. We have now to see whether the defendant has satisfied the Court that the summons was not "duly served." To appreciate this ground on behalf of the appellant the learned Counsel for the appellant has referred to the provisions contained in O. V, r. 1/ of the Civil Procedure Code. It is said that after the defendant refused to sign the receipt of the summons it was an incumbent duty of the peon to "affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business, etc." The learned Counsel says that as the peon does not say that he affixed a copy of the summons upon the house of the defendant, the summons was not "duly served."

O. IX, r. 13 requires the applicant to satisfy that the summons was not "duly served", and the onus is, therefore, upon the appellant. It was, therefore, for the appellant to elicit from the peon, who has been examined on behalf of the respondent, as to whether he did or did not affix a copy of the summons on the house of the defendant as required by r. 17. No attempt seems to have been made by the appellant to substantiate this ground by evidence. The evidence offered by him on this point is nil. Although a point of law may be taken in appeal for the first time, yet it is subject to the well recognized rule that the evidence on the record is complete and no further evidence is necessary to substantiate the point. There is no evidence of the requirement of r. 17 not having been complied with by the peon and it is therefore not open to the appellant to take this point in appeal for the first time.

Assuming that the peon did not affix a copy of the summons on the house of the defendant, it is a question of grave doubt as to whether the personal service such as in the present case, can be impugned as defective and illegal on the ground of irregularity alleged by the appellant. Various authorities have been cited on both sides in this case in support of their respective contentions and these are Maruti v. Vithu (1), Rajendro Nath Sanyal v. Jan Meuk (2), Gopaldas Girdharilal v. Sayad Islu (3), Diwan Chand v. Parbati (4), Kassim Ibrahim Saleji v. Joharmull Khenka (5), and Kisler v. Tetimar (6). The cases referred to above only lead to the conclusion that there has been a sharp divergence of opinion upon the point raised. Stanyon, J., Acting Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur, in the case of Gopal- das Girdharilal v. Sayad Islu (3) held that, where the service of summons has been by delivering or tendering of it to the defendant personally the service is complete, and no irregularity by the process-server or other ministerial officer of the Court such as the omission of the process-server to obtain the signature of the defendant could undo it. He would support his view upon the maxim quod fieri non debet factum valet.

Mr. Justice Broadway of the Punjab Chief Court, on the other hand, took a directly opposite view in the case of Diwan Chand v. Parbati (4).

The other cases are not very directly on the point but they seem to hold that the provisions relating to service of summons should be strictly complied with.

Now, the mode of service of summons has been prescribed by rr. 10 to 20 of O. V of the Civil Procedure Code. Rule 10 says; "Service of the summons shall be made by delivering or tendering a copy thereof signed by the Judge or such officer as he appoints in this behalf and sealed with the seal of the Court." Rule 12 requires that so far as practicable service shall be made on the defendant in person. Rule 16 requires that when the serving officer delivers or tenders a copy of the summons to the defendant personally he shall require the signature of the defendant to whom the copy is so delivered or tendered to an acknowledgment of service endorsed on the original summons. Rule 17 requires that where the defendant or his agent refused to sign the acknowledgment or the serving officer cannot find the defendant and there is no agent to accept service of summons on his behalf, etc., he shall affix a copy of the summons on the outer door or some other conspicuous part of the house in which the defendant ordinarily resides or carries on business, etc.

The summons in this case was served by delivering a copy of the summons together with a copy of the plaint to the defendant personally (the defendant being personally known to the peon). The defendants refused to grant a receipt therefor, but retained the summons and the copy of the plaint. Therefore, when the defendant took the summons and the plaint, the peon had no other copy to affix upon the outer door or other conspicuous part of the house. If the defendant had refused to take the summons and to sign the acknowledgment, in that case the peon would have had a copy of the plaint and the summons to be affixed upon the house of the defendant. The defendant by his conduct rendered it impossible to have the copies affixed on the house and he cannot be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong and to plead that the omission rendered the service invalid. Now, under the supreme Court Rules in England, "a writ is personally served by giving to and leaving with the defendant a copy of the writ and showing him the original, if within reasonable time he demands to see it." Thomson v. Phency (7), (Halsbury's Laws of England, volume XXIII, page 115). This is what was exactly done in the present case. The defendant was in his house and copies of the summons and the plaint were given to and left with him in his hands. Therefore, the requirements of r. 17 were complied with.

Even if there was any irregularity, I do not think that the substantial and direct service on the person of the defendant as is prescribed by r. 10 of O. V is so vitiated as to hold that the summons was not "duly served" and thus to entitle the defendant to have the ex parte decree set aside under O. IX, r. 13. We find that, upon the report of the peon the serving officer, the Court recorded an order that the summons on the defendant was personally served. This order was in accordance with r. 19 of O. V of the Civil Procedure Code which requires that when summons is returned under r. 17 the Court shall satisfy itself by making such inquiry as it thinks fit and "shall either declare that the summons has been duly served or order such service as it thinks fit." The report of the peon is very clear in its terms to show what transpired and that report was accepted by the Court below as a full compliance with the requirements of the law. This shows that the summons was served in this particular case in accordance with the practice prevailing in the Court below relating to personal service.

For all these reasons, I am of opinion that upon the merits also the contention of the learned Counsel that the summons was not duly served must fail. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Foster, J.—I agree with the findings of fact which have been arrived at, but I am of opinion that the provisions of rr. 17 and 19 of O. V of the Civil Procedure Code are not rigid. Where a defendant upon whom a summons has been served retains the copy that is put into his hands and refuses to give an acknowledgment, he makes it impossible for the peon to affix that copy to the house. The alternative would be that, in anticipation of such contumacious conduct on the part of the defendant, there should be sent out in every case a spare copy for affixing to the house and for complying with the provisions of rule 17. That I do not think was ever intended to be a rule of procedure. The difficulty was in fact, foreseen when the present Civil Procedure Code was being prepared and it was suggested at that time that a proviso should be added the purport of which was that, where the defendant or his agent refuses to sign the acknowledgment and retains the copy of the summons delivered to him, the Court may direct that the summons shall be deemed to have been duly served. That proposal was not, however, adopted and the only conclusion I can gather is that the high authorities who superintended the drafting of the Code regarded it as unnecessary, and it appears to me to be by no means a strained interpretation of the law to consider that r. 19 enables a Court, in such circumstances as I am referring to, to declare that the summons has been duly served after holding that this mode of service shall suffice. Having this view, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Railways Act (IX of 1890) ss. 72, 76—Risk Note, Form B.—Goods carried at owner's risk for portion of route and at Railway risk for remainder—Goods destroyed in transit over latter route—Damages, suit for—Burden of proof.

Plaintiff consigned certain goods for carriage to the defendant Company and paid freight for a certain section of the route at the owner's risk rate and for the rest of the route at the ordinary rate. He signed an Owner's Risk Note for the entire route, but it was found that the Company had not published an owner's risk rate for the latter portion of the route. The goods were destroyed by fire while in transit over the portion of the route for which freight had been paid at the ordinary rate. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the value of the goods:

Held, (1) that the mere fact that the plaintiff had signed an Owner's Risk Note for the entire route did not make the note applicable to that portion of the route over which the ordinary freight had been paid;

(2) that the burden lay on the defendant Company of proving that they had exercised the ordinary amount of care with respect to the goods.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 24th July, 1920.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. L. P. Zutshi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—On the 30th of April 1919, the plaintiff through his agent tendered to the defendant Company 5 bales of cotton tussore to be carried from Sholapore to Cawnpore.

Over some portions of their railway the defendant Company carry goods at a reduced or "owner's risk" rate. It appears quite clearly that whilst the Company had an established owner's risk rate from Sholapore to Itarsi, they had published no such rate between Itarsi and Cawnpore and no consignors of goods between these two latter stations could require the Company to carry them at owner's risk. The goods would go via Itarsi to Cawnpore. The consignor signed an Owner's Risk Note by which he agreed to hold the Company free from responsibility in a number of contingencies. The Subordinate Judge has found that in fact the consignor paid a total sum made up of the reduced rate from Sholapore to Itarsi and of the ordinary rate from Itarsi to Cawnpore. The figures are not mathematically exact but are so near as to justify the conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge. Then, on the 13th of May 1919, the goods were proceeding on their journey between Itarsi and Cawnpore smoke was seen to be issuing from a waggon near the engine. The train was brought to a stand still at station Sanchi, and an endeavour made to put out the fire. It was burning fiercely inside the waggon and in the result the consignor sustained a pecuniary loss by destruction of and damage to his goods to the extent of Rs. 5,136-5-6. He made a claim on the Company who repudiated it on the ground that they were covered by the Owner's Risk Note signed by his agent which purported to cover the entire journey.

To this the consignor replied that, whatever might be the form of the note, the fact was that he paid the ordinary rate on the Itarsi Cawnpore section of the journey and was, therefore, entitled to regard the Railway Company during his portion of the journey, as a bailee. We think the plaintiff's contention is clearly right in the admitted absence of an owner's rate from Itarsi to Cawnpore.

This is the final result of the arguments in this Court but in the Court below the matter was greatly obscured and the trial lengthened by defective pleadings on both sides and by an inability on the part of the Counsel on both sides to forecast the possibility of the Company being found to be bailees. Thus, it happened that the Counsel for the Railway Company failed to provide himself with the necessary evidence to prove the taking of proper care.

The circumstances under which the fire originated are unknown. The waggon was of iron and was a covered one. It was apparently of proper construction, clean and fit for the accommodation of the goods of the plaintiff.

GADODIA AND CO. v. GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY COMPANY

The van contained the plaintiff's goods, also some cases of military stores, some bags of coconuts and 12 other boxes. All the goods, except those of the plaintiff, had come from the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway. It is conceded in this case that if the defendants are entitled to rely on the Owner's Risk Note as governing the Itarsi-Cawnpore journey, they must succeed in the action as the plaintiff has failed to give any such proof as would over-set the wide protection given to the Company by that document. If, however, the defendants were carrying the goods between Itarsi and Cawnpore at the ordinary rate then the defendants were bound to put before the Court all materials necessary affirmatively to prove that in the carriage of the plaintiff's goods they had acted with the same degree of care in relation to those goods as a reasonably prudent man would act in relation, to his own. The burden of proof, if the goods were carried at owner's risk, lay on the plaintiff. If the Company were bailees the onus shifted to them.

Their proper defence should have been, first, that they were under no liability because of consignment note. Alternatively, if it were held that that note was not applicable that they took of the goods the degree of care described above. That position was, however, as we have said, never clearly in the minds of the legal advisers of the Railway Company in the lower Court and in fact they actually resisted an application made by the plaintiffs on the 14th of July 1920, which, if assented to by them and proper particulars obtained, would in our view in all probability have made their position as bailees safe and supplied the gap in their evidence which still exists. On the 14th July 1920 the plaintiffs were casting about for any evidence which might help them to overcome the provisions of the Owner's Risk Note. On the previous day Pandhari Nath Balwant, a witness for the defendants, had mentioned the presence of "12 other boxes" in the waggon and had said that he did not know what they contained. No one to this day knows what they contained. It was the plain duty of the Railway Company, for their own protection, on learning of the fire to have communicated in May 1919 with the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Company and to have made enquiries as to the description, contents, etc., of these boxes if they had not already, as they may have had, these very materials in their possession. These boxes were part of the contents of a waggon in which a fire had mysteriously broken out on their line and the Company ought to have taken every step to ascertain, if they could, the nature of the goods entrusted to them. They did not make enquiries at the time. At all events if they did, the result was not communicated to the Court and, as we have said, they resisted an application which sought to obtain that information from them. Even if immediately after the outbreak of the fire, the Company had omitted to enquire from the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway as to the nature of the articles in the 12 boxes, it was the plain duty of their legal advisers, when the Company became defendants in an action a few months later, to tell them that they would, if unprotected by the Risk Note, be bound to give an explanation as to the contents of the other articles in the waggon, and then diligently to pursue that enquiry.

Further, they had in their possession at this time, when the action was commenced, some documents which they had received relative to the boxes from the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway. Although they were highly relevant to the action, the defendants say that they destroyed them in the ordinary course of business.

The Railway Company, therefore, produced no evidence as to the general nature of the contents of the boxes. It, would in our opinion, have been sufficient if they had merely proved the consignment or delivery notes of the Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway, which we are told as a matter of practice pass from one line to another on receipt of goods, providing of course that the details on these notes contained nothing to arouse any suspicion that the goods were likely to be dangerous to carry.

They could then have said that they accepted the boxes in accordance with the usual practice, and that there was nothing on the consignment notes, or in the appearance of the boxes, which would cause any one to hesitate to carry them in the ordinary way, or to place them in proximity to other goods. That evidence would have satisfactorily discharged the onus which lay upon them, as soon as their position was decided to be that of bailees, and would have entitled them to succeed in the action. There being this gap in the evidence as to the 12 boxes, we are obliged to hold that the defendants did not produce that quality or amount of evidence which they were bound by law to do in order to prove affirmatively the taking of all due care. Inasmuch, however, as the plaintiff did not plead his cause of action with precision, and in that he alleged negligence on the part of the Railway Company without giving any particulars of such negligence, and also failed in his pleading and at the trial to bring out the alternative position of the Railway Company as bailee, on which point the appeal has succeeded, we, whilst reversing the judgment of the lower Court and decreeing the plaintiff's claim, deprive the plaintiff of all costs in the lower Court. The plaintiff will have in this Court the costs of the appeal with fees on the higher scale.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 23rd March 1922.

Mr. Hyder Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr. Niamatullah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad, dated the 23rd March 1922, which reversed the decree of the Additional Munsif of the same place, dated the 5th September 1921.

The plaintiffs' claim, which succeeded in the Court of first instance but failed in the Court of Appeal, was for the recovery of possession by partition of one-third share in 25 bighas 2 hiswas of land specified in List B attached to the plaint, situate in village Khetwar, pargana Manjhora, district Fyzabad. The ground of the claim is that the land in dispute was the joint ancestral property of the parties to the suit in which Sahipat Singh, Oohcha Singh and Bahore Singh owned a one-third share each. The plaintiffs are the heirs of Sahipat Singh, defendants No. 1 to 3 of Bahore Singh and the remaining defendants No. 4 to 7 of Oohcha Singh. In the first Regular Settlement a decree for qabzdari rights in respect of the lands in suit was obtained in the name of Oohcha Singh as against the taluqdar of Ajudhia on the 23rd of May 1869, and in 1870 Bahore Singh obtained a decree in respect of his one-third share against Oohcha Singh. The purpose of the present suit is to obtain separate possession of the one-third share which originally belonged to Sahipat Singh. The pedigree showing the relationship of the persons originally holding title to the lands in suit and of the parties to the present litigation may now be set down here:—

To this claim of the plaintiffs written defence was filed by the defendants No. 1, 2, 4 and 5. Sahipat Singh's title and possession were denied, so was the possession of the plaintiffs. Bar of limitation was pleaded. The correctness of the pedigree was also disputed but both the Courts below have found it proved and the concurrent finding has not been challenged by any of the parties to this appeal. The title and the bar of limitation are the points now in dispute.

INDERPAL SINGH v. THAKUR DIN SINGH

As regards title, it was urged by the learned Counsel for the appellants that the question has not been decided by the lower Court. On the other hand, the learned Advocate for the respondents urged to the contrary. It is much to be regretted that the matter is left in a moot condition. I, however, do not think it is necessary to decide between these two contentions. If the former contention is correct, I can decide the issue myself even if it involves a pure question of fact under section 103, read with O. 41, r. 25, of the Code of Civil Procedure, Sri Chidambara Sivaprakasa Pandara Sunnadhigal v. Veerama Reddi (1). If the latter contention is right, the question of title in the present case is not one of fact alone. It entirely rests on the interpretation of certain documents and the legal inferences to be drawn from them. This Court is, therefore, competent to determine it: Satgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (2).

On the question of title, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have established it. It appears that on the 15th November 1863 there was a family settlement to which (1) Bahore Singh, (2) Oohcha Singh, (3) Sahipat Singh, (4) Bahadur Singh and (5) Dharjan Singh were parties (Ext. 5). The last two named persons were the co-sharers of Oohcha Singh within his one-third share in the entire property. Amongst the properties dealt with by the settlement is the village Khetwar Khas within which the plots now in suit are admittedly situate. This settlement unequivocally declares the rights of Bahore Singh, Oohcha Singh and Sahipat Singh in equal proportion in the properties which were the subject-matter of the settlement. It follows that the plaintiffs, who are the descendants of Sahipat Singh, have a one-third share in Khetwar Khas. The Regular Settlement came after the arrangement stated above, and it is admitted that in that Settlement a decree for qabzadari rights in the plots in suit in village Khetwar Khas was passed in the names of Oohcha Singh on the 23rd May 1869. It is further admitted that that decree was passed against the taluqdar.

It follows that, between the date of the settlement of the 15th November 1863 and the date of the decree of the 23rd May 1869, the village, in which the property in suit is situate, came to fall within the taluqa of Ajudhia. The decree is not before me but the irresistible inference is, that the ex-proprietary rights decreed in favour of Oohcha Singh against the taluqdar of Ajudhia must have been founded on his previous title as a proprietor of the village. The Settlement Circular No. 19 of 1861 clearly directed the recognition of ex proprietary rights in favour of the former proprietors in respect of certain classes of lands. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary, I must presume that the decree of the 23rd May 1869 was passed in accordance with the Circular mentioned above. The ex-proprietary title, therefore, in the lands in suit, was merely a residue of the previous proprietary title in the village which was the subject-matter of the settlement of the 15th November 1863. The conclusion, therefore, is that all those who had title to the village in 1863 have title to the ex-proprietary rights which accrued under the decree of the 23rd May 1869. I have already stated that Sahipat Singh, the ancestor of the plaintiffs, was declared to have title in the village to the extent of one-third. He, therefore, had a title to the lands in suit to the same extent and if he had it, it is now admitted that it has devolved on the plaintiffs by right of inheritance.

In the year 1870 Bahore Singh brought a suit against Oohcha Singh for a declaration in respect of his one-third share in the properties in suit. He succeeded (Exts. 6 and 7). In 1917 Bahore Singh's descendants sued Oohcha's representatives for possession of their one-third share by partition. They succeeded again. (Exts. 8, 9, 10 and 11). The judgments in the two litigations mentioned above are clearly admissible in evidence in the present case under section 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, though the appellants were no party to either of them: See the decisions of the Privy Council in the cases of Ram Ranjan Chakrabati v. Ram Narain Singh (3), Bitto Kunwar v. Kesho Prasad (4) and Dinmoni Chow- dhurani v. Brojo Mohun Chowdhurani (5). It is clear, in fact it is not disputed, that the title of Bahore Singh to a one-third share in the property in suit has the same origin as the title of the present plaintiffs, if any, in the same property and to the same extent. It is true, that since the date of the decree of the Settlement Court the name of Ochoha Singh, and after his death, of his descendants has stood in the Revenue Records in respect of the entire holding but that fact cannot adversely affect the proved title of the plaintiffs in the properties in suit. Indeed, having regard to the result of the two litigations referred to above, it is well nigh impossible to come to any conclusion on the plaintiffs' title other than that they have it.

It now remains to decide the question of limitation. The learned Subordinate Judge has unmistakably given a finding in favour of the defendants and it was on the basis of that finding that he reversed the decree of the Court of first instance and dismissed the plaintiffs' claim. In coming to the conclusion that, "the present suit is not within time" he has discussed the question of adverse possession and decided it in favour the defendants. Indeed, his finding that the suit is not within time is founded on his opinion in favour of the defendants on the plea of adverse possession.

The first thing to be observed in this connection is, that the defendants did not put forward the plea of adverse possession in their written statement. All that they said was, that the plaintiffs and their ancestors never remained in possession of the property in suit and that the suit was not within time. On these pleadings the only issue which arose on this part of the case was the one which was framed by the Court of first instance and it was as follows:—"Have the plaintiffs been in possession of the property in suit within limitation?" In discussing this issue the Court of first instance made a pertinent observation that, "it is significant that no adverse possession by the defendants has been set up at any time." Its last finding on the question was as follows: "I, therefore, find that no question of limitation arises now that the property has been found to be joint property." If there were nothing more and the question of title were decided in favour of the plaintiffs, the plea of limitation, as it arose on the pleadings, must also be decided in favour of the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs on proof of their title would be entitled to a decree for possession. Whatever might have been the doubts on the soundness of this legal situation before, they must be deemed, according to my judgment, to have been set at rest by the latest pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Secretary of State v. Chellikani Rama Rao (6). In the case just now mentioned, the High Court held that "though the title was originally in the Crown, still, as the possession of the claimants for twenty years prior to the Notification is found, it rests upon the Crown to prove that it has a subsisting title by showing that the possession of the claimants commenced or became adverse within the period of limitation, i.e., within sixty years before the Notification." With reference to this opinion Lord Shaw, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, said: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the view thus taken of the law is erroneous." At the end of his judgment his Lordship made the following observation: "But with reference to the 'subsisting title,' it appears to their Lordships that nothing further is needed than the acknowledgement of the undisputed fact that these islands formed in the sea belonged to the Crown. That fact is fundamental: until adverse possession against the Crown is complete, that is to say, is for the period of sixty years, that fundamental fact remains, and that fact forms subsisting title. And it is no part of the obligation of the Crown to fortify their own fundamental right by any enquiry into possession or the acceptance of any onus on that subject." The result of this decision, therefore, is that an admitted or proved title subsists all through until complete adverse possession is established. In this interpretation of the decision of Lord Shaw, I am supported by a recent decision of a Divisional Bench of the High Court of Allahabad in the case of Jai Chand Bahadur v. Girwar Singh (7). Indeed, Mr. Justice Walsh is strongly of opinion that the effect of Lord Shaw's decision is that the ruling in the case of Inayat Husain v. Ali Husain (8), requiring a plaintiff having title further to prove his possession within limitation, must be taken to have been overruled.

The lower Appellate Court has, however, decided the case on the assumption that the plea of adverse possession has been raised. I think it is necessary to give my own opinion on the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge in respect of that plea. The learned Advocate for the respondents argued, in the first instance, that the finding of the lower Appellate Court in that respect was one of fact and, therefore, not open to any challenge in second appeal. It is certainly startling that such an argument could be seriously put forward at this time of day. The question of adverse possession is a mixed question of fact and law. The facts are ascertained conclusively by the Court of first appeal. The soundness of the conclusions from the facts so ascertained is a matter of law. This has been held repeatedly by the Privy Council: See the cases of Lachmeswar Singh v. Manowar Hossein (9), Ram Gopal v. Shamskhator (10), and the latest case of Satgur Prasad v. Raj Kishore Lal (2). The primary function of a Court in deciding the issue of adverse possession is to draw legal inferences from proved facts. The legal inference so drawn is clearly a proposition of law. I, therefore, reject the contention that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of adverse possession is conclusive in second appeal.

The result of my finding on the question of title already recorded is, that the plaintiffs and the defendants are co-owners in equal shares of the property in suit. This is a cardinal point in subordination to which the decision of the question of adverse possession should be approached. As Lord Buckmaster observed in the case of Hardt Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (11): "possession may be either lawful or unlawful and in the absence of evidence it must be assumed to be the former." And possession is lawful when it is in virtue of a legal title. In the case of Thomas v. Thomas (12) Wood, Vice Chancellor, said: "Possession is never considered adverse if it can be referred to a lawful title." This dictum was quoted with approval by Lord Macnaghten in the case of Corea v. Appuhamy (13). In the case before me it is admitted that the defendants and before them their ancestor, Ochoha Singh, have all along been in possession of the whole of the property in suit and in enjoyment of the profits thereof. In the circumstances, the question to be asked is, 'Has one tenant-in-common legal title to the whole?' If he has, then the defendants' possession is lawful and, therefore, not adverse. It is well established that one tenant-in-common is not the agent of the other nor is there any fiduciary relation between them: Kennedy v. De Trafford (14). In a clash of self interest and duty to others the law will compel a person to do his duty: Hardoon v. Belilos (15), In re Biss, Biss v. Biss (16) and Griffith v. Owen (17). But one tenant owes no duty to the other tenant-in-common in respect of the interest of the latter in the common property though he has a duty to share the advantages acquired in his character as such with the other tenant: Keech v. Sandford (18) and the notes thereunder; also see section 90 of the Indian Trust Act (II of 1882). The presumption that the possession of one co-tenant of the entire common property is lawful seems to be founded on the principle that between two tenants-in-common each has a title to the whole and also to his undivided moiety and each is said to be seized per my et per tout, that is, each co-tenant has the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole." In the case of Kennedy v. De Trafford (14) Lord Herschell, in speaking of a co-owner called Dodson, said :—"Dodson was an owner of this property, the owner of an undivided moiety it is true, but each owner of an undivided moiety is none the less truly an owner." I must, therefore, hold that prima facie the possession of the defendants of the common property in its entirety was not adverse to the plaintiffs. The defendants had to prove that the possession which was and is not prima facie adverse had or has become so in reality. This is a heavy onus which the defendants have to discharge. It is clear on the authorities that the fact that the plaintiffs have not been in the enjoyment of the rents and profits of the property in suit does not establish a title by adverse possession in the co-tenant, that is, the defendants who have enjoyed such profits, the reason of the view being, that it is consistent with the legal title in the co-tenant in possession. It may be doubted whether the old rule of English Law, afterwards abrogated by the Statute 3 & 4 William IV, Ch. 27, section 12, that the possession of one of several co-parceners, joint tenants or tenants-in-common is the possession of the others so as to prevent the Statute of Limitation from affecting them is applicable in India to "shares in an unpartitioned agricultural village." See the decision of Viscount Cave in the case of Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (19). But one thing is perfectly clear that the co-tenant out of possession starts with a presumption in his favour that the possession of the other co-tenant is not adverse but lawful. This is well established by a series of decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and further it is equally well established that nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster must be proved by the co-tenant in possession in order to bring about the success of the plea of adverse possession : Corea v. Appuhamy (13), Hardit Singh v. Gurmukh Singh (11), Muthunayagam v. Brito (20), and the last decision of Viscount Cave in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (19), already mentioned. In the case of Jogendra Nath Roy v. Baldeo Das (21), decided by the High Court of Calcutta, a series of cases are noticed in support of the opinion expressed above. From the same principle, it would seem to follow that such overt acts on the part of the tenant in possession as would ordinarily prove the adverse character of the possession as against a stranger will afford no evidence of such character as against the co-tenant, the reason being that those acts will be found to be consistent with the lawful title of the co-tenant in occupation.

The last question to be considered in this connection is, what facts have been found by the learned Subordinate Judge and, finally, whether those facts establish an ouster or an equivalent of ouster in relation to the plaintiffs. With reference to the statement of plaintiff No. 1 himself in the witness-box, the learned Subordinate Judge says : "that the defendants are in possession over the plaintiffs' share from the last 50 years and that the plaintiffs have made demands of their shares since a very long time." Then he proceeds : "this piece of evidence goes to show that the plaintiffs are making demands of this share since nearly 50 years but the defendants are not complying with their demands." From this he infers "the express repudiation of the title of the plaintiffs by the defendants within the knowledge of the former." I have no hesitation in holding that the two facts that the defendants have been in possession all along, and that the plaintiffs made demand for their share for the same period from the defendant and the defendants did not comply with their demand constitute neither ouster nor anything equivalent to an ouster. The whole finding comes to nothing more nor less than this, that the defendants have been in possession and have not paid any share of the profits to the plaintiffs though the plaintiffs have made demands for the same. It has not been found that the non-payment of the profits was accompanied with any assertion of hostile title on the part of the defendants. In order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers there must be evidence of an open assertion of hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the other. In the words of Lord Macnaghten in Corea v. Appuhamy (13), already referred to, the defendants' possession was in law the possession of the plaintiffs. It was not possible for them to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in their minds. There must be an ouster or equivalent to an ouster : See also the cases of Jang Bahadur v. Mahammad Adul Hasan Khan (22) Asghar Husain v. Akbar Husain 23 and Ram Manorath v. Santi, (24). I, therefore, hold that the plea of adverse possession fails.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs throughout.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER NO. 184
OF 1922.

Present :—Mr. Justice Rankin and Mr. Justice Mukerjee.

CHINMATHA NATH PAL CHOUDHURI—

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Court-Fees Act (VII of 1870) s. 19 H.—Probate, application for—Valuation by District Judge—Order, whether final—Appeal—Refusal to exclude properties from valuation—Revision.

Where an applicant for probate refuses to amend the valuation of the estate to the satisfaction of the Collector, and the latter applies to the District Judge asking that an enquiry may be made into the true value of the property, the finding of the District Judge as to the value of the property under sub-section (5) of section 19 H of the Court-Fees Act is final and no appeal lies against it by virtue of the provision contained in sub-section (7) of the section.

Where, however, the applicant alleges that certain properties have been erroneously included in the Schedule, and that they are trust properties and not part of the estate of the deceased and should, therefore, be excluded from the valuation, it is the duty of the District Judge to go into the matter, and his failure to do so amounts to a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in him by law and renders his order open to revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Appeal from the Order of the District Judge, Nadia, passed in O. S. No. 11 of 1920, dated the 21st April 1922.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha, for the Respondent.—In this case the appellant applied for probate of a Will of his father. In the application for probate a Schedule of property was attached. On the 7th August 1920, the probate was ordered to be granted. Then, about a year afterwards, the Collector's valuation of the properties given in the said schedule was received by the District Judge and thereafter, on the 5th December 1921, the Collector filed a petition before the learned District Judge under section 19 H, clause. (4) of the Court-Fees Act, to hold an enquiry into the true value of the property. Thereafter, the District Judge asked the Munsiff of Ranaghat to hold an enquiry about the true value of the property. The Munsiff held an enquiry and in that enquiry the petitioner for probate made an application stating that certain properties given in the said Schedule, were made debutter and filed a new Schedule of properties including the debutter properties and that the said debutter property might be valued separately as no Court-fees were required for obtaining a probate regarding the said debutter property and the learned Munsiff held that it was beyond the jurisdiction of that Court and submitted a report, holding that the Collector's valuation was correct. The petitioner also filed an application before the District Judge to the effect, that there was no provision in the Probate Act, by which Court-fees were required on debutter properties and so Court-fees should not be charged upon the value of the debutter properties. The Judge disallowed the prayer of the petitioner and accepted the Collector's valuation. The petitioners also contended that a compromise-decree had been passed in a declaratory suit regarding the said debutter properties, during the pendency of the probate proceeding but the learned Judge was of opinion that he could not take notice of that decree. Against the said order this present appeal has been preferred. My preliminary point of objection is that no appeal lies at all from the order of the learned District Judge. The order under section 19 H of the Court-Fees Act is under the final order. The provisions of that section are quite clear. It must be remembered that it is not an order under the Probate and Administration Act but one under section 19 H of the Court Fees Act which, as I have already pointed out, is conclusive. Reads the section. The appeal, therefore, cannot be maintained.

Babu Tarakaswar Pal Chaudhury, for the Petitioner.—Although purporting to be an order under the Court-Fees Act, it is really an order disallowing a prayer for amendment of the petition for probate. Probate is to be granted to the estate of the deceased and the properties made debutter, by a deed of gift were a part of the estate of the deceased and as such an appeal lies under section 86 of the Probate Act. The Judge has every power to do all that he could do under the Civil Procedure Code. He had the power of amendment. In any case, the petition of appeal may be treated as a petition of revision as the lower Courts have manifestly failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them. The doctrine of lis pendens was not applicable to the present case, as there was no suit pending at the time regarding the said debutter properties.

Baba Surendra Nath Guha in reply.—This appeal cannot be treated a petition of revision inasmuch as the failure of exercising jurisdiction cannot be made out in this case. It is on that ground alone that order can be revised. The learned Munsif was right in refusing to enter into the question of the nature of the properties in an order under section 19 (H) of the Court-Fees Act. Moreover, it must be remembered that in the declaratory suit the Secretary of State was not a party at all.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case may shortly be summarised as follows: On the 12th of April 1920 the appellant applied for probate of the Will of one Braja Nath Pal Choudhuri, deceased. The application was registered on the 14th April 1920 and intimation thereof was sent to the Collector. On the 3rd July 1920 the learned District Judge ordered that the probate of the Will was to be granted to the applicant. On the 15th September 1921 the Collector's valuation was received in the Office of the District Judge. The value according to that valuation was Rs. 41,053-8-0, being much in excess of the value stated in the application filed by the applicant. The applicant not having amended the valuation to the satisfaction of the Collector the Collector, on the 5th December 1921, filed a petition in the Court of the learned District Judge under the provisions of section 19 H. clause (4) of the Court-Fees Act asking that an enquiry might be held into the question of the true value of the properties. The learned District Judge on the same date made an order purporting to be under clause (5) of section 19 H. of the Court-Fees Act directing an enquiry to be held by the learned Munsif of Ranaghat. When the enquiry was being held by the learned Munsif, it appears that on the 14th February 1922 an application was filed before him by the applicant alleging that certain properties which had been included in the Schedule attached to his original application were properties which he was not claiming under the Will but were properties covered by a deed of gift, and he prayed that these properties might be excluded from the Schedule for the purpose of the valuation that he was going to make. There was a further prayer worded rather curiously to the effect that a fresh valuation might be made in respect of certain properties which were being mentioned in a separate list which the appellant was filing before the learned Munsif inasmuch as he wanted the probate to be in respect of those properties only. The learned Munsif rejected that application. A further application to the same effect, made on the 20th February 1922, was also rejected by the learned Munsif. The learned Munsif was of opinion that inasmuch as he had been asked by the terms of the order by which the enquiry had been directed to make a valuation in respect of the properties which were mentioned in the Schedule attached to the original application he had no jurisdiction to go into the question of valuation of the properties mentioned in the fresh list filed before him, that is, to the remaining properties after excluding from the list of properties originally mentioned in the Schedule which were alleged to be covered by the deed of gift. He also found that it was not possible to identify the properties in the aforesaid two lists. In this view of the matter, he submitted a report which came in the usual course before the learned District Judge on the 21st April 1922.

It appears that it was argued before the learned District Judge on that day that, inasmuch as those properties which were being claimed as having been declared to be debutter or trust properties in a suit between the applicant and his brother, were properties which had been wrongly included in the Schedule attached to the original application the valuation of the properties left by the deceased must be reduced by excluding the value of those properties. The learned District Judge thereupon passed the following order: "The petitioner, on the strength of a decree to which Government is not a party and which was made while the present matter was pending, claims exemption for the value of that portion of the estate which was there declared to be debutter or trust property. The Government pleader contends that this decree cannot now be taken notice of, and he relies on the doctrine of lis pendens. This contention appears to be correct and is allowed. The petitioner will pay stamp-duty on the total net valuation found above by the 17th May on which date the probate must be produced."

As against this order the present appeal has been filed by the applicant. An objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent to the effect that no appeal lies against this order, inasmuch as it is not an order passed under any of the provisions of the Probate and Administration Act and under section 86 of that Act an appeal only lies from such orders as are passed by the District Judge or District Delegate by virtue of the powers conferred on him by that Act. Now, it appears to us that the order was passed by the learned District Judge under the provisions of section 19 H of the Court-Fees Act. The section clearly lays down the procedure which is to be followed when an application is made by the Collector on the refusal of the applicant for a probate to amend the valuation to his satisfaction and it lays down that if such an application is presented before the District Judge on behalf of the Collector asking that an enquiry may be held into the true value of the property the Court shall hold or cause to be held an enquiry accordingly and shall record a finding as to the true value, as near as may be, at which the property of the deceased should have been estimated. It further says that the finding of the Court recorded under sub-section (5) shall be final. Now, the learned District Judge, on receipt of the report from the learned Munsif, recorded the finding as quoted above under the provisions of sub-section (5) of section 19 H. of the Court-Fees Act; and by sub-section (7) of that section his finding is final. No appeal lies from this finding, and, therefore, the objection of the respondent as to the maintainability of the appeal must succeed and the appeal must fail.

We have been asked to treat the memorandum of appeal filed in this case as an application for the exercise of our powers in revision under section 115, Civil Procedure Code. It appears to me that the learned Munsif was asked to hold the enquiry with reference to this matter was of opinion that by the of the order under which he was holding the enquiry he had no jurisdiction to go into the question as to whether the properties were debutter or trust properties or not. It appears to me on the plain words of section 19 H. of the Court-Fees Act that he was to ascertain the value of the property of the deceased, for the purpose of determining the stamp-duty. Now, if those properties were, as a matter of fact, debutter or trust properties and were not properties which the applicant was claiming under the Will, the Munsif, in order to make a valuation of the property of the deceased, would be bound to go into that question; and it would be obligatory upon him to enquire whether these properties were debutter properties or not. The learned Munsif seems to have acted upon an erroneous view of the law and to have refused to exercise a jurisdiction which undoubtedly he had when he was proceeding under the provisions of sub-section (5) of section 19H.

When the matter came before the learned District Judge he, too, does not appear to have gone into the question at all. He refrained from going into the question upon the ground suggested by the Government pleader before him, that the decree which was produced as showing that the properties were as a matter of fact debutter could not be taken notice of by him upon the doctrine of lis pendens. Now speaking for myself, I have not been able to understand how the doctrine of lis pendens can be said to apply to the present case. The litigation in which that decree had been passed had come to an end the decree no doubt was passed while the present proceedings were pending, and the Secretary of State could not in any sense be said to be bound by it: but the doctrine of lis pendens has no application at all. The decree was a piece of evidence which, in the absence of facts and circumstances showing that it was fraudulent or collusive, would show that the applicant was not claiming the properties under the Will. The matter, therefore, was one which deserved consideration and, in any event, the learned District Judge was bound to go into the matter and come to a decision as to whether those properties should or should not be treated as properties of the deceased within the meaning of section 19 H of the Court-Fees Act. I have said he, too, has not gone into the question and in that respect, I think, he has failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in him by law.

In this view of the matter, I would treat the memorandum of appeal as an application under section 115, Civil Procedure Code and would set aside the order passed by the learned District Judge on the 21st April 1922, and remit the matter to him for a further consideration of the question involved.

In this case no order is made as to costs.

The petitioner has paid only Rs. 5 Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal. But as it has been held that the memorandum of appeal is to be treated as an application for revision a Court-fee of Rs. 15 is payable. The petitioner is allowed one week's time to pay the deficit Court-fee of Rs. 5.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 488 OF 1922.

DHANRAJ MISIR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
RAMESHWAR MISIR—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.

Custom—Pre-emption—wajib-ul-arz, entry in—Preference among co-sharers.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that every co-sharer had a right to transfer his share but at the time of transferring it, it was incumbent on him to inform the nearer co-sharers and in case of their refusal the other co-sharers of the village, and in case both these sets of co-sharers refused, then he was entitled to sell it to whomsoever he liked. A later wajib-ul-arz provided that when a co-sharer wished to sell his share, a co-sharer who was a near relation, then a co-sharer who is a distant relation, then all co-sharers in the patti and then co-sharers in the ambardari and then the other co-sharers of the village would have priority and preference ;

Held, that under these provisions a nearer co-sharer had a preferential right of pre-emption over a distant co-sharer.

Second appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Basti, dated the 7th January 1922.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Udadhiya, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The first Court decreed the claim but on appeal the suit has been dismissed.

Both the Courts below agree that there is a custom of pre-emption in this village. The Court of first instance was further of opinion that under that custom a nearer co-sharer was entitled to a preferential right as against a distant co-sharer. The lower Appellate Court has come to a contrary conclusion.

Two wajib-ul-arzes were produced by the plaintiff in support of the alleged custom.

The first one was of 1860 which provided that every co-sharer has a right to transfer his share but at the time of transferring it it is incumbent on him to inform the near co-sharer (hissedar qaribi) and in case of his refusal the other co-sharers of the village, and in case both these sets of co-sharers refuse, then he is entitled to sell it to whomsoever he likes.

Reading this clause, there can be no doubt whatsoever that under the custom it was the right of the near co-sharer to have the first offer. If, without any such offer having been made to the near co-sharer in the first instance, property was sold to a distant co-sharer the near co-sharer could obviously urge that the custom had not been complied with. The wording of this wajib-ul-arz makes it clear that there was a preference inter se between the co-sharers.

The other wajib-ul-arz was of the year 1886 which provided that when a co-sharer wishes to sell his share a co-sharer who is a near relation, then a co-sharer who is a distant relation, then all co-sharers in the patti and then co-sharers in the ambardari and then the other co-sharers of the village shall have a priority and preference. In the case of refusal by them, the co-sharer has a right to sell it to any one he likes. This wajib-ul-arz, in our opinion, gives a preference inter se when it is read in connection with the first one, no doubt is left in our minds.

Appeal from the decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, Sind, in Suit No. 645 of 1920.

Mr. Dipchand Chandmal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kalumal Pahlumal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the 13th July 1920 Dipchand Dowlatram filed a suit for settlement of partnership accounts against the firm of Parmanand Chimandas consisting of more than one partner and carrying on business at Karachi by their managing partner Parmanand Jethanand.

Parmanand Jethanand as managing partner of the defendants filed a written statement stating that the partnership was between plaintiff and himself and not between plaintiff and the firm of Parmanand Chimandas.

Plaintiff thereupon, on 5th November 1920, asked the Court to allow him, under O. VI, r. 17 Civil Procedure Code, to amend the description of defendant substituting the following description, viz :—

“Parmanand Jethanand, Hindu, adult, merchant, residing in Karachi, in the name and style of Parmanand Chimandas.”

On 10th December 1920 plaintiff applied under O. I, r. 10 and O. VI, r. 17 for leave to amend the description of defendant by substituting the following description, viz :—

“Parmanand Jethanand, Hindu, adult, merchant, Karachi, carrying on business at Karachi, in the name and style of Parmanand Chimandas.”

The learned Additional Judicial Commissioner was inclined to believe that the plaintiff had made a bona fide mistake, the partnership deed being in the possession of the defendant and the plaintiff not being fully aware how the partners were described in the deed, but in view of the fact that the period of limitation had expired the date when the suit was instituted the application for leave to amend felt that an order allowing the plaintiff to amend the plaint would deprive the defendant of a substantial right which had accrued to him and work injustice. He accordingly rejected the application for leave to amend the plaint and dismissed the suit with costs, Against this judgment and decree the plaintiff has filed this appeal.

It is a well known principle of law that plaintiff should not be allowed by amendment to set up fresh claims barred by limitation, Heldon v. Neal (1). Similarly, in Steward v. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (2), a defendant was not allowed to amend in such a manner as to impute responsibility to a third party at a time when the plaintiff's remedy against the third party had become barred by limitation. And it has been held by Facett, A. J. C. of this Court, in Ludhmal v. Secretary of State (3), that the Court should not allow an amendment which is not necessary for determining the real questions in controversy between the parties and when the application for amendment is really made merely in order to get an advantage over the other side by raising a plea which is an after thought. Again, an Appellate Bench of this Court has pointed out that the general rule enacted in O. VI, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, permitting amendment of pleadings to determine the real questions in controversy between the parties is subject to the limitation that the case tried must be consistent with the case originally laid and that the state of facts and equities and grounds of relief originally alleged and pleaded should not be departed from : Khuram Porimal v. Chatomal Tirithmal (4). On the other hand Pratt, J. C., and Fawcett, A. J. C., in Nur Khatun v. Sumar (5), drew attention to the fact that under O. VI, r. 17 the Court has very wide powers of granting amendment and that it can, in the exercise of its discretion, grant an amendment so as to enable a plaintiff who has failed on the original cause of action to continue his suit on a cause of action accruing pendente lite. dhya v. Gaya Din Kalwar (6), the Allahabad High Court held that the Court had no power to allow an amendment of the plaint by introducing a new cause of action after the period of limitation in respect of such cause had expired and in Janardan Kishore Lal v. Shib Pershad Ram (7), the Calcutta High Court held that no amendment of a plaint could be allowed where the proposed amendment would take away from the defendants, if allowed, a right that they would have, if the plaintiffs had proceeded against them by way of original suit. In the case of Charan Das v. Amir Khan (8), however, their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down the principle that where there is admittedly a power to allow an amendment of the plaint, though such power should not as a rule be exercised where its effect is to take away from a defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time, yet there are cases where such considerations are outweighed by the special circumstances of the case. The question arises, do such circumstances exist in the present cases? We are of opinion that the answer is in the affirmative. The present case appears to me, in certain respects, very similar to the case of Kisundas Rupchand v. Kachappa Vithoba (9). There, too, the plaintiff filed a suit on the basis of a partnership. They alleged that, in pursuance of the agreement, they had debited Rs. 4,001 to defendants and prayed for dissolution and accounts. The lower Court held that the plaintiffs did deliver Rs. 4,001 worth of cloth, but came to the conclusion that no partnership was created and held that the suit as framed could not lie. The plaintiffs appealed, contending that the partnership was created, but at the hearing abandoned this plea and prayed for leave to amend by adding a prayer for the recovery of the money. The Bombay High Court allowed the amendment and allowed the plaintiff's claim, holding that the defence of limitation was a defence to which the defendants were never fairly entitled and that the allowance of the amendment only withdrew from them an advantage which they ought never to have received. Batchelor, J., then pointed out that in Weldon v. Neal (1), Lord Esher intimated that leave to amend might have been granted if special circumstances had existed to justify it and Beaman, J., observed that the words of O. VI, r. 17 are very wide and that they authorize Courts to allow amendments whenever, in the opinion of the Judges, it is just that this should be done. In the present case the plaintiff does not wish to amend the plaint with regard to the nature of the relief sought. His partner Parmanand Jethanand had, prior to the partnership, traded in the name of Parmanand Chimandas, the name in which the partnership was subsequently carried on. The partnership-deed executed eight years previously in 1912 was in the possession of the defendant and the plaintiff, under the mistaken impression that his partner was not Parmanand Jethanand but Parmanand Chimandas, the name in which Parmanand Jethanand had traded, and that Parmanand Chimandas was a firm consisting of more partners than one, thus described his partner in the plaint. The mistake was a bona fide mistake, and the act of the plaintiff in thus describing the defendant amounted, in our opinion, to a mere misdescription. Parmanand Jethanand was on the record. He was fully aware of the nature of the relief sought and aware of the mistake which the plaintiff had made. His contention that the suit against himself is barred by limitation seems to us a defence to which he was never fairly entitled. There is no question of the plaintiff having as an after-thought put forward a new claim barred by limitation inconsistent with his original claim; the relief which he has claimed throughout has been a settlement of accounts. There is no question of the defendant being over reached or surprised. In the circumstances, we are of opinion that this is a fit case where plaintiff should be allowed to amend the plaint in the manner referred to in his application dated 10th December 1920.

We accordingly reverse the judgment and decree and remit the suit for trial. We award plaintiff his costs.

Appeal accepted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 397 OF 1923.

February 28, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy
and Mr. Justice Chotzner.BHOLA NATH DUTTA—APPLICANT—APPELLANT*versus*RADHANATH BISWAS AND OTHERS —
RESPONDENTS.*Easements—Quasi-easement, what is—Partition of joint property—Right of lateral support—Joint wall
—Rights of parties.*

The term 'quasi-easement' is applied to those easements which, not being easements of absolute necessity, come into existence for the first time by presumed grant or operation of law on a severance of two or more tenements formerly united in the sole or joint possession, or ownership, of one or more persons. [p. 909, col. 1.]

The principle is that, on the grant by the owner of an entire property of part of that property as it is then used and enjoyed, there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements, termed quasi-easements, which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, and which have been and are at the time of the grant in use for the benefit of the part granted. [p. 909, col. 1.]

As between co-parceners, mutual conveyances of the shares allotted to them respectively upon a partition of joint property, whether under the direction of a Court of Law or otherwise, will carry with them by presumption of law the right to such continuous easements as are necessary for the reasonable use and enjoyment of the premises respectively allotted. One of such easements is the right of support, including lateral support, which passes by implication of law to a grantee, and it is applicable to the case of a party wall which is allotted entirely to one of the co-parceners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements. JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Court below, dated the 15th September 1923, passed in the execution of a decree. Gopinath Biswas, a brother of the respondent, brought a suit for partition of their family dwelling house which was in the joint occupation of all the co-sharers. There was a decree for partition and a Commissioner was appointed to effect it. By consent of parties, the Commissioner made the allotments by which two contiguous rooms under one roof were allotted to Gopinath and the respondent, respectively. There are walls between the two rooms which fell to the share of Gopinath who had to pay some money to the other co-owners as compensation. Thereafter, Gopinath sold the portion allotted to him to the appellant who applied for execution of the decree. Possession of the room allotted to Gopinath was delivered to the appellant by Court. The appellant, however, was not satisfied with the delivery of the possession of the walls between the two rooms as the beams and rafters of the roof of the respondent's room were resting on them and applied to the Court below to deliver to him 'exclusive possession' of the walls by removing the beams and rafters of the respondent as he said he was going to demolish the walls and rebuild his portion of the house. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the appellant's prayer, remarking that the walls form the support of the respondent's roof and that the removal of the walls would mean the collapse of the respondent's room. The learned Judge has given no other reason for rejecting the appellant's application except that it would be a great hardship to the respondent if the appellant was allowed to remove the walls. This appeal is against that order and it is argued that as the respondent has no right to the walls which have been allotted to the appellant the prayer for exclusive possession should not have been refused on the ground of hardship to the respondent.

A point by way of preliminary objection was raised by the respondent, namely, that as full delivery of possession had been effected and certified by the Court the objection now raised by the appellant cannot be taken in the execution proceedings though it is the subject of a separate suit. But this objection has been raised in execution of the decree between parties to it, we think it is rightly raised under section 47, Code of Civil Procedure.

The respondent bases his claim to rest his beams and rafters on the appellant's walls on a right which is known in law as a 'quasi-easement'. "The term 'quasi-easements' has been applied to those easements, which, not being easements of absolute necessity, come into existence for the first time by presumed grant or operation of law on a severance of two or more tenements formerly united in the sole or joint possession, or ownership, of one or more persons." Peacock on Easements, third Edition, p. 343. Such easements will not come into existence where they are expressly excluded by the terms of the grant or are inconsistent with the intention of the parties. They generally arise on severance of tenements held under sole possession or one ownership or on division of a tenement held under joint ownership or possession. They are conveniences to which the law subjects one part of the property for the benefit of the other part. Such easements, therefore, arise on a partition of joint property as they do in the case of the division of a tenement possessed or owned by a single person under grants by him. The difference in the two cases is that, according to the law obtaining in places where the Indian Easements Act is not in force, while in the former case a division of joint property gives rise to reciprocal easements in favour of co-parceners, in the latter case such rights do not ordinarily accrue to the grantor except by express reservation by the terms of the grant. But the law relating to quasi-easements, arising on a division of joint property is based upon the same principle which governs the conveyance of a part of the tenement held by a single owner or possessor. The principle is that on the grant by the owner of an entire property of part of that property as it is then used and enjoyed, there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements, termed quasi-easements, which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, and which have been and are at the time of the grant in use for the benefit of the part granted: Suffield v. Brown (1)

Amutool Rasool v. Jhormuch Singh (2), Delhi and Loodal Bank, Ltd. v. Hem Lall Dutt (3). Such easements arise in favour of the grantee on several principles as observed in the case of Sarojini Debi v. Krishna Lall (4). Applying the above principle, which is well established, to the case of partition of joint property, the law may be thus stated: "As between co-parceners, mutual conveyances of the shares allotted to them respectively upon a partition of joint property, whether under the direction of a Court of Law or otherwise, will carry with them by presumption of law the right to such continuous easements as are necessary for the reasonable use and enjoyment of the premises respectively allotted." Peacock on Easements, p. 393 Bolye Chunder Sen v. Lalmoni Dasi (5), Sarojini v. Krishna (4). One of such easements is the right of support (including lateral support) which passes by implication of law to a grantee: Dalton v. Angus (6), and it is applicable to the case of a party wall which belongs entirely to one of the adjoining owners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements: Watson v. Gray (7).

The learned Vakil for the appellant maintains that the easement claimed by the respondent places an onerous burden on his client's property, that it is not a case of absolute necessity and that the respondent may erect a wall on his own property to support his portion of the roof. As we have observed, a quasi-easement need not be of absolute necessity but is one which is reasonably necessary, i.e., necessary for the occupation of the severed tenements in the same condition as it was at the time of the transfer. In this connection, reference may be made to section 13 of the Indian Easements Act. Though the Act is not in force in this part of the country, it may serve as a useful guide for ascertaining the rule of law on which the doctrine of lateral support is founded: See the first portions of illustrations (h), (i) and (j) to section 13 and

AMRIT PAIYAR BILAT MANDAL v. SUNDAR RAM RAMPHAL RAM

Krishnamarazu v. Marraju, (8), Ratanji v. Idaji, (9), and Purshotam v. Durgoji (10). No doubt the easement claimed by the respondent to some extent affects appellant's property but that fact is not in itself sufficient to annul a right founded upon a well recognised principle of law whether such right is claimed as one attached to property or under a presumed contractual relation between the grantor and the grantee or among co-parceners. As to the suggestion that the respondent may erect a wall to support his portion of the roof, the same argument may be advanced against all quasi-easements which are not easements of necessity, and appears to us to be without substance.

On a consideration of the authorities on the subject and of the facts of the present case, we are of opinion that the easement of lateral support claimed by the respondent arises by necessary implication on a partition of joint property and is well founded in law.

The partition suit was between brothers and it may fairly be presumed that in consenting to the allotments made by the Commissioner, it was not the intention of the respondent to surrender his right to such quasi-easements as legally accrued upon a division of the joint property nor at that time was a controversy such as the present within the contemplation of the parties, and the intention of the parties is an important element in such matter. Sarojini v. Krishna (4). The mere fact that the price of the walls which were valued at Rs. 15 by the Commissioner was taken into account in adjusting the value of the allotments and was included in the value put upon the appellant's portion does not in any way affect the applicability of the law as above stated.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, which we assess at 3 gold mohurs.

Under section 61 of the Contract Act where neither party makes any appropriation, payments made by a debtor must be applied in the discharge of debts in order of time.

Mr. Md. Hasan Jan, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Manohar Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—This is an application for review of a judgment passed by this Court on the 9th of January 1923 in Civil Revision No. 199 of 1922 by which the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge of Darbhanga in favour of the present petitioner for a sum of Rs. 415-14-9 was set aside. The judgment of this Court proceeded on the basis that six items on the debit side and two items on the credit side of the account were barred by time when the suit was brought, this contention of the learned Counsel for the defendant not being then contested on behalf of the plaintiff. has now been shown by the petitioner that this is an error apparent on the face of the record. One of the six items on the debit side which were then excluded from consideration was an item of Rs. 645-2-3. This payment was made on Aghan Sudi 4th, 1325, which corresponds to the 7th December 1918. The suit was brought on the 7th December 1921 and, consequently, this item was not barred by time.

The learned Counsel for the opposite party, however, contends that, even if this item is into consideration, still nothing is due defendant to the plaintiff. His argument is that the total of the entries of the debit side for 1326 is Rs. 1,761-10-0 and for 1327 Rs. 46-10-6 and that if the first five items only are excluded, which are all of dates anterior to the 7th December, 1918, the total will be only Rs. 828-2-0 whereas on the credit side of the account, after excluding the first two items Rs. 265-1-9 and Rs. 199, there is a total payment of Rs. 928-4-0. The fallacy of this argument, however, is that under section 61 of the Contract Act where neither party makes any appropriation payments are to be applied in the discharge of debts in order of time. The first payment of Rs. 265-1-9 cannot be applied to the debt of Rs. 977-3-0 because the payment was made on the 3rd of November while the debt was not incurred until the 7th November, but all the subsequent payment must be appropriated to the discharge of the debt of Rs. 977-3-0 before the item of Rs. 645-2-3 is reached. When the payments are appropriated in this way, the plaintiff is found to be entitled to the decree which the Subordinate Judge gave except as to interest.

The result is that this application must be allowed, the decree of this Court set aside, and the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge restored, except that the rate of interest is to be calculated at Re 1 and not Re. 1-8-0. The decree will be prepared accordingly.

There will be no costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Alienation by Antecedent debt, what is—Barred debt, what antecedent—Debt incurred on security of family property, whether antecedent

Per Lindsay, J.—If a Hindu father in his life-time chooses to discharge an antecedent debt by an alienation of family property although the recovery of that debt would have been impossible under the law of limitation at the time the father discharged it, his sons must be held to be bound by the father's transaction. [p. 913, col. 2; p. 914, col. 1.]

Per Sulaiman J.—When a debt becomes time barred it ceases to be a legal debt, and though the Hindu Law does not recognise the principle of limitation, there is no ground for holding that the sons of a Hindu debtor cannot take advantage of the Statute of Limitation which makes such a debt unenforceable. [p. 915, col. 2.]

The basis of the liability of Hindu sons in respect of debts incurred by the father is threefold. That liability may either be based on the existence of a legal necessity or on the ground of the personal obligation of the sons to pay their father's debts or on the ground of the transfer being in lieu of an antecedent debt; and each of these is a distinct and separate basis. The liability on the basis of antecedency of the debt is not affected by the question whether the father who contracted the debt is dead or alive. [p. 918, col. 1.]

A debt does not cease to be an antecedent debt merely because it is secured on the family property; and a mortgage debt can be an antecedent debt just as much as a simple money-debt can be. [p. 918, cols. 1 and 2.]

Although, therefore, a debt which has become absolutely barred by time and the liability to pay which has not been undertaken in a previous writing, cannot be deemed to be a good antecedent so as to validate a conveyance by the father in lieu of it, yet where a mortgage-debt as such has not become time-barred but only the personal remedy against the father is barred, it can still be a good antecedent debt so as to justify an alienation in lieu of it. [p. 919, col. 1.]

GAURI SHANKER SINGH v. SHEO NANDAN MISRA

JUDGMENT.

Lindsay, J.—The material facts to be considered in this case are as follows:—

On the 8th October 1904 Bachu Singh, the defendant No. 2, executed a simple mortgage-deed in favour of the first defendant Sheo Nandan Misir.

Admittedly, the property which was hypothecated under this document was joint family property.

On the 22nd September 1916, with the object of satisfying the debt which was due under this earlier mortgage, Bachu Singh executed a mortgage with possession in favour of the same mortgagee. It was recited in this deed that the sum of Rs. 12,265 was owing on the earlier mortgage. A further sum of Rs. 460 was recited to have been taken in cash at the time of the execution of the mortgage for necessary expenses and for the completion of the document. The total mortgage-debt secured upon this second mortgage was thus a sum of Rs. 12,725.

The suit out of which this appeal arises has been brought by the son and two grandsons of Bachu Singh for the purpose of avoiding this latter mortgage. There were allegations in the plaint to the effect that Bachu Singh, the defendant No. 2, is a man of licentious and extravagant habits. It was further alleged that the mortgage in suit had not been executed for legal necessity or for any other purpose which would be binding upon the plaintiffs. It was, therefore, prayed that the mortgage transaction of the 22nd September 1916 should be set aside. At the same time, the plaintiffs expressed their willingness to pay to the defendant No. 1 any sum which the Court might find to be owing to him on the ground that it represented money which was taken for purposes binding upon the family.

In the result, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for the setting aside of the mortgage. He has given the plaintiffs a decree for redemption on payment of the full amount, that is to say, Rs. 12,725.

The Subordinate Judge definitely found, and we agree with his finding, that there is no reliable proof whatever that Bachu Singh is a licentious or extravagant man. The evidence which was led by the plaintiffs on this point is altogether vague and unsatisfactory.

The plaintiffs come here in appeal and we have heard Dr. Agarwala at length on their behalf. In fact, we have had the case up twice for argument.

It seems to us that this appeal is, concluded by the principles which have been laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in their recent judgment in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (1).

The question to be considered is whether this mortgage which the plaintiffs now seek to have set aside was entered into for the purpose of discharging an antecedent debt.

It must be admitted that, as the law stood under the ruling in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5), the debt incurred under the earlier mortgage of 1904 would not have been treated as an antecedent debt for the simple reason that that debt was incurred by the father on the security of the joint family property.

The learned Subordinate Judge was, therefore, right in holding that this earlier mortgage-debt could not constitute an antecedent debt within the meaning of the ruling just referred to. He dismissed the suit, however, on other grounds mainly concerned with the burden of proof. He was of opinion that the plaintiffs had failed to discharge, what he thought was, the onus which lay upon them, and it was for this reason that he ordered that a decree for redemption should be prepared.

Returning to the question of antecedent debt it seems to us plain from this recent decision of their Lordships that of the definition of "antecedent debt" which was given in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5) has been materially altered. As we read this latest pronouncement of the Full Bench of the Judicial Committee, we understand antecedent debt to mean merely a debt which is antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, a debt truly independent of and not part of the transaction impeached. In the concluding portion of the judgment their Lordships laid down five propositions which govern all cases of this kind and the definition which has just been quoted is recited in proposition No. 4.

GAURI SHANKAR SINGH v. SHEO NANDAN MISRA

It cannot, therefore, be doubted that the debt which was raised by the mortgage of 1904 must now under this recent ruling be treated as an antecedent debt.

It has, however, been argued strenuously before us that we ought not to treat this earlier debt as an antecedent debt because, at the time the mortgage of 1916 was executed, no suit for the recovery of the debt owing under the earlier mortgage would have lain against the father. A suit to recover the money from the father as a personal debt would have been barred by the rule of limitation. We are asked, therefore, to hold that because in the year 1916 when the transaction which is now being impeached was entered into the earlier debt had become time-barred we ought to hold that the debt was not in reality an antecedent debt.

This is a question of some difficulty and there is no direct authority upon the point. There can, of course, be no doubt that a personal obligation incurred by the father in the year 1904 under a registered deed could not have been enforced after a period of six years had elapsed.

It is, however, well understood that, though the remedy which the creditor has may be extinguished the debt may nevertheless subsist and, even after the period of limitation for a suit for recovery of the debt has passed, the creditor has a right to receive the sum due to him from his debtor if the latter is disposed to pay him.

It is further clear that a payment made to discharge a time-barred debt could not in law be recovered by the debtor and, further, it is to be observed that the payment of a time-barred debt by a Hindu father could not in any sense be treated as an improper act or, to use the stock phrase, a transaction tainted with immorality. In this recent case which was before their Lordships of the Privy Council it is clear from the facts that the personal obligations incurred by the father were still enforceable, inasmuch as the earlier debts had been contracted within a period of between two and three years prior to the date of the mortgage in suit.

Here, as we have pointed out, the debt was incurred in 1904 while the suit is of the year 1916.

Bearing in mind, however, that the liability of the son for payment of the father's debts rests upon a pious duty, it may well be doubted whether the sons in this instance could be heard to say that they are not bound by the payment which their father made in order to discharge an earlier debt although the recovery of that debt was barred by the law of limitation.

It is well settled that an alienation made by a Hindu widow for the purpose of discharging a debt due by her husband is binding on the reversioner even though the recovery of the debt which was discharged had become time-barred at the time of the transfer made by the widow. This principle has been laid down in a number of cases, e.g., Kondappa v. Subba (2), Chimmaji v. Dinkar (3), Udai Chunder v. Ashutosh Das (4).

In these cases it was held that the discharge of a husband's debt whether barred or not was a pious duty of the widow and that an alienation made by her for the payment of such a debt would be binding upon the reversioners. It was said in the judgment in the Bombay case that the moral obligation resting upon the widow could not be obliterated by the circumstance that the law of limitation barred or did not bar a suit against the widow for the recovery of the debts. It is no breach of duty on the widow's part if she pays a debt which is time-barred.

If these principles hold good in the case of a widow it appears to me that they ought to hold equally good in the case of a son who is also under the pious obligation of discharging the debts of his father.

It is true, as we have pointed out, that the father here is still alive, but under the recent Privy Council ruling that circumstance in no way affects the liability of the sons. It has now been definitely settled that the pious obligation which binds the sons can be enforced even in the life-time of the father.

It seems to me, therefore, that if the father in his life-time chooses to discharge an antecedent debt, although the recovery of that debt would have been impossible under the time-barred debts of her husband was supported, may be distinguished on the ground that thereby she had conferred a spiritual benefit on her deceased husband.

I am, therefore, of opinion that if the previous debt of the father had become absolutely time-barred a conveyance in lieu of it cannot be held to be binding on the sons. To hold so would be to extend the applicability of the exception to an extent for which there is up to now no precedent.

This, however, does not dispose of the whole question. In the present case the previous mortgage-debt had not become absolutely barred by time. The creditor's remedy, if enforceable, was to realise his debt as against the security. All that had happened was that owing to the lapse of six years a personal decree against the father in the event of the security proving insufficient, could not have been passed.

The question to be considered, therefore, is whether the mortgage-debt per se as distinct from a personal debt of the father can be deemed to be an antecedent debt within the meaning of the exception.

The rule laid down in Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (12), was that where joint ancestral property had passed out of a joint family, either under a conveyance executed by a father in consideration of an antecedent debt, or in order to raise money to pay off an antecedent debt, or under a sale in execution of a decree for the father's debt, his sons, by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts, cannot recover that property unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes and that the purchasers had notice that they were so contracted. Lord Hobhouse in Nanomi Baluasin v. Modhun Mohun (13), remarked that, 'the decisions have for some time established the principle that the sons cannot set up their rights against their father's alienation for an antecedent debt, or against his creditor's remedies for their debts if not tainted with immorality. On this important question of the liability of the joint estate, their Lordships think that there is now no conflict of authority.' In none of these cases any expression like the expression "an antecedent unsecured debt" or the expression "an antecedent personal debt" was used. Stanley, C. J. in the Full Bench case of Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (7), defined the expression 'antecedent debt' as meaning a debt which is not for the first time incurred at the time of a sale or mortgage, that is presently incurred, but a debt which existed prior to and independently of such sale or mortgage, though of course a bona fide debt not colourably incurred for the purpose of forming a basis for subsequent mortgage or sale or other similar object.

The case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (5), was one where on the facts no antecedency arose. The debt had been incurred under the mortgage itself which was in suit and all other remedies, excepting that of enforcing the security, had gone. In view of a certain conflict of decisions in the various Courts in India which was brought to their Lordships notice it was thought desirable to state the law comprehensively. According to the interpretation put on that case by the Allahabad High Court two main propositions could be deduced from it. (1) The debt, in order to be an antecedent debt, must 'not only have been antecedently incurred but incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate; that is to say, that it must be a personal debt of the father and not a mortgage debt by him. And (2) while the father remains alive, the attempt to affect the son's and grandson's shares in the property in respect merely of their pious obligation to pay off their father's debt and not in respect of the debt having been principally incurred for the interest of the estate itself which they and their father jointly own, must fail, that is to say there could be no pious obligation to pay off the father's debt during the life-time of the father. It might barred by the Statute of Limitation or not. But the argument on behalf of the plaintiffs is that though there may be a religious obligation on the sons to be bound by their father's debt, which is neither illegal nor immoral, nevertheless they are entitled to claim the benefit of statutory enactments. If a debt has ceased to be a legal and enforceable debt against the father the liability of the sons to pay it must also be deemed to have ceased. There cannot be much doubt that if a suit against the father were time-barred the creditor would not be allowed to pursue his remedy against the sons on the basis of the doctrine of their pious obligation to pay it. This was clearly laid down in the case of Narasimha Misra v. Lalji Misra (6) and this principle has been consistently followed. Stanley, C. J., in his leading judgment in the Full Bench case of Chandra Deo Singh v. Mata Prasad (7) remarked: "A son admittedly may be successfully sued for the debt of his father on the basis of his pious obligation to discharge his father's debts, provided that the suit be not barred by limitation, and a decree passed in such a suit may be enforced in execution by the sale of ancestral property of the family."

On the other hand, it must also be conceded that, when a debt becomes time-barred the debt itself is not extinguished but the right to recover it becomes barred. There is nothing immoral or illegal in the debtor paying off such a time-barred debt. In fact, under section 25, sub clause (c) of the Indian Contract Act a promise made in writing and signed by the person to be charged therewith to pay wholly or in part a debt of which a creditor might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits is not considered void as being without consideration. If, therefore, a father previous to the deed of transfer had given a promise in writing undertaking to pay his time-barred debt his personal liability would be revived and such liability could be enforced against his sons.

The point pressed before us, however, is that in the present case the father had not in any such way revived his personal liability before the conveyance was executed; that is to say, there was no subsisting personal debt of the father which could have been legally enforced just before this deed of transfer and independently of it. It is pertinently asked whether a sale-deed by a father in lieu of some old debt, more than 12 years old, on which remedies have become time-barred, would be considered to be a conveyance in lieu of an antecedent debt so as to bind the sons. I am not prepared to say that such a conveyance would be a good conveyance.

Knox and Piggott, J.J., in the case of Indul Singh v. Sarju Singh (8) laid down that a mortgage-deed executed by a father of a joint Hindu family in consideration of an antecedent debt which had become time-barred was not binding upon the sons. I am inclined to agree with the view expressed therein. When a debt has become time barred it has ceased to be a legal debt, and, even though the Hindu Law does not recognise the principle of limitation, I see no ground for holding that the sons cannot take advantage of the Statute of Limitation which makes such a debt unenforceable. If such a debt had been tried to be enforced against the father or the sons, the suit could not possibly have been decreed on the basis of any pious obligation. Can such an unenforceable obligation be deemed to be an antecedent debt for validating a subsequent transfer?

The soundness of the decision in Indul Singh v. Sarju Singh was somewhat doubted in the case of Hari Har Baksh Singh v. Bharat Prasad (9) but the latter case was one in which, previous to the transfer, there had been a promise in writing by the father undertaking to pay his previous debt. On the same ground the case of Narayanasami Chetti v. Samudra Mudali (10) is distinguishable inasmuch as there, too, the father had executed a promissory-note in lieu of a previous time-barred debt. The same can be said about the case of Ram Kishan v. Chhedi Har (11). The cases where an alienation by a Hindu widow in lieu of time-barred debts of her husband was supported, may be distinguished on the ground that thereby she had conferred a spiritual benefit on her deceased husband.

I am, therefore, of opinion that if the previous debt of the father had become absolutely time-barred a conveyance in lieu of it cannot be held to be binding on the sons. To hold so would be to extend the applicability of the exception to an extent for which there is up to now no precedent.

GAURI SHANKER SINGH v. SHEO NANDAN MISRA

A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Arumugam Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (14), came to the conclusion that the first proposition did not follow from Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5). A Full Bench of the Patna High Court in the case of Mathura Misra v. Raj Kumar (15), came to the same conclusion.

The case of Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (16), was also a case in which there was no antecedency in time between the debt and the conveyance.

Great reliance has been placed by the learned Advocate for the respondents on the case of Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (17). In that case the father had executed a mortgage in the year 1904 for a period of ten years. Within three years from its date he in 1907 sold his equity of redemption in the property to the mortgagees themselves. Their Lordships set aside the sale deed and refused to treat the previous mortgage-debt as an antecedent debt so as to justify the second alienation. It is strongly contended on behalf of the plaintiffs-appellants that this case was expressly referred to in Counsel's argument before their Lordships in a subsequent case to be presently referred to and was not disapproved of. It is urged that this case is intelligible only on the assumption that, in order to be a good antecedent debt, there must be a personal liability of the father to pay it, and it is suggested that the mortgage-debt of 1904 was not treated as an antecedent debt because it was secured by a usufructuary mortgage under which the mortgagee had no right to sue for money against the father. It is said that if every previous mortgage-debt were to be treated to be an antecedent debt then the sale-deed of the year 1907 could not have been set aside at all. I have carefully considered the force of this argument and have come to the conclusion that Chet Ram's case (17) was decided not on this supposed ground but on the principle laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5). At page 373 Lord Shaw repelled the argument that 'although by the rules of the Mitakshara law a mortgage is at its date an invalid deed in so far as purporting to encumber the joint family property, yet when it purports to become a consideration for a sale it then becomes a just and a legal consideration on the principle of antecedent debt, and that the family property could not be affected by such an invalid mortgage, but it could be sold next year or next day to the mortgagee for an antecedent debt, namely, the mortgage-debt itself. The rule in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5) insisting that the obligation must not only have been antecedently incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such joint estate, was reaffirmed. The case of Jogi Das v. Ganga Ram (16) was also quoted where Lord Haldane had interpreted the judgment in the case of Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh (5) as one laying down in effect that joint property could not be alienated as against co-sharers by way of mortgage or otherwise, except for necessity, or for payment of an actual antecedent debt, quite distinct from the debt incurred in the mortgage itself, and that, in consequence, the transaction in that case could not stand,' and it was added that 'the very circumstance of a pious obligation does not validate the mortgage'. The other rule laid down in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5), namely, that there could be no pious obligation during the father's life-time was also relied upon and the appellant's argument was not acceded to as the doctrine was being invoked against grandsons in the life-time of the sons. I am unable to find any passage in the judgment in Chet Ram v. Ram Singh (17) which would support the contention that the previous mortgage-debt was not treated as an antecedent debt because the usufructuary mortgagee had no right to recover a money decree.

The question what is an antecedent debt has been recently considered by a Full Board of the Privy Council in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangala Rai (1). Their Lordships, after referring the previous authorities, have laid down propositions which they would wish to as the result of those authorities,

GAURI SHANKER SINGH v. SHEO NANDAN MISRA

We are bound, therefore, to accept the most recent pronouncement as the final authority on the matter. I concede that, on the actual facts of that case, the question which we have to consider in the present case did not directly arise, for the previous mortgage-deeds were all deeds within six years of the mortgage-deed in suit and the personal remedy of the mortgagor had not become barred by time. Nevertheless, the five propositions laid down by their Lordships must be unreservedly accepted. In these five propositions I understand the basis of the liability of Hindu sons to be three-fold. That liability may either be based on the existence of a legal necessity or on the ground of the personal obligation of the sons to pay their father's debt, or on the ground of the transfer being in lieu of an antecedent debt. I understand each of these to be a distinct and separate basis. It is true that the original foundation of the doctrine of an antecedent debt might have been the pious obligation of the Hindu sons to pay their father's debt but by a long series of decisions it has been recognised as a distinct basis. Their Lordships define an antecedent debt as one which is antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, that the debt must be truly independent and not part of the transaction impeached. Their Lordships also add that the liability cannot be affected by the question whether the father, who contracted the debt or burdens the estate, is alive or dead.

The learned Judges of this High Court had held that a mortgage per se could not be an antecedent debt for a mortgage is obviously a security which is not apart from the security of the estate over which it is constituted. If, therefore, it could not be shown that an anterior mortgage had been incurred in respect of an antecedent debt unconnected with the estate, then the anterior mortgage could not be held to be debt antecedent to the subsequent mortgage and that subsequent mortgage could not stand though its proceeds were entirely used to pay off the prior mortgage. Their Lordships of the Privy Council thought that if proper attention were paid to the word 'incurred' mentioned in the judgment in Ram Chandra's case, (5) this High Court's interpretation on it was not correct. Their Lordships clearly held that a debt ceases to be an antecedent debt merely it is secured on the family property. Referring to the observations in Sahu Ram Chandra's case (5) that there could be no pious obligations on the sons during the life time of the father their Lordships felt bound to say that they did not think that those observations could be supported. A mortgage-debt, therefore, can be an antecedent debt just as much as a simple money-debt can be. Although, in the particular case before their Lordships the personal liability of the father had not become barred by time when the deed in suit was executed, yet their Lordships do not at all lay stress on that fact or make it the basis of their decision. That this is so is supported by the following consideration. Their Lordships at page 937 express their entire agreement with the view of the learned Chief Justice in the Full Bench Madras case reported in Arunugam Chetty v. Muthu Koundan (14).

Now, there can be no doubt that the Madras Full Bench case had not proceeded on the basis of the personal liability of the father being still subsisting. The Division Bench had referred two questions for the decision of the Full Bench. "(1) Whether an independent debt, not immoral or illegal, contracted by the father on the security of the joint estate antecedent to the mortgage sued on can be treated as an antecedent debt so as to support the charge on the sons' share also to the extent of the same secured on the prior mortgage, and (2) in such a case can the former debt be treated as an antecedent debt for the purpose referred to, if the personal liability of the father under the earlier mortgage is not barred on the date of the suit on the document?" It is noteworthy that the learned Chief Justice, whose views have been approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council, answered the first question in the affirmative and, therefore, thought it unnecessary to answer the second question at all. It is manifest that the learned Chief Justice treated a mortgage-debt as a good antecedent debt, independently of the question whether the personal liability of the father under the earlier mortgage had or had not become barred at the date of the mortgage-deed in suit. These views having been approved of by their Lordships of the Privy Council we are bound to give effect to

CHHATERDHARI MAHTO v. NASIB SINGH

The conclusion to which I have come, therefore, is that although a debt, which has become absolutely barred by time and the liability to pay which has not been undertaken in a previous writing, cannot be deemed to be a good antecedent debt so as to validate a conveyance by the father in lieu of it, yet when the mortgage debt as such has not become time-barred but only the personal remedy against the father is barred it can still be a good antecedent debt so as to justify an alienation in lieu of it. I also, therefore, agree that the plaintiffs cannot avoid the mortgage.

Appeal from a decision of the District Judge, Patna, dated the 20th July 1921, affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Patna, dated the 9th June, 1920.

Messrs. S. Dayal and Brijkishor Prasad, for the Appellants

Mr. Sushil Madhab Mullick, for the Respondents.

Ross, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against the decree of the District Judge of Patna affirming a decision of the Subordinate Judge dismissing their suit. The facts may be briefly stated: One Parsan Singh, husband of defendant No. 1, and grandfather of defendant No. 2, owned a mukarrari interest in 3 dams share in mauza Chariari Buzurg and the proprietary interest subsequently passed into defendants' family. By a deed of Ijara, dated the 11th July 1917, they granted a Satana lease of the aforesaid share to the plaintiffs Jhandu Mahton and Chhatardhari Mahton in consideration of Rs. 600. On the 24th of March 1902 the defendants executed a mortgage in favour of Jhandu Mahton and Chhatardhari Mahton in respect of the same property in consideration of Rs. 1,300 repayable in five years. The present suit is brought on this mortgage. The debt became re-payable in March 1907 and a suit might, therefore, be maintained up to March 1919. The suit in fact was instituted on the 20th May 1919 and the only question was whether, as the Courts below have concurrently held, it is barred by time or not. The plaintiffs, in order to save limitation, alleged in paragraph 7 of the plaint that certain payments were made from time to time on account of principal and interest. Both the Courts below have held that these payments were proved and this finding is conclusive. The plaintiffs were allowed to put in evidence their statement in suit No. 455 of 1909 filed by the present defendants, Exhibit 4, which is said to contain an acknowledgment of liability sufficient under section 19 of the Limitation Act to give a fresh start to limitation from the date thereof. The procedure adopted by the Subordinate Judge in allowing this evidence to be given, notwithstanding the express provisions of O. VII, r. 6, which requires the ground upon which exemption from limitation is claimed to be pleaded, is to be disapproved. But the evidence cannot now be ruled inadmissible because the defendants did not object to it, as they should have done, at a time when the plaintiffs would have been enabled to apply for amendment of their plaint. Assuming, then, that this evidence was properly admitted, the sole question is whether it contains such an acknowledgment as is contemplated in section 19. The statement is as follows: "In 3 Dams Pokhta which as is said by plaintiff is equivalent to 12 as 12 dams, 12 Kauri Kham, Parsan Singh Ram Saran Singh and Ram Prasad Singh had as stated above full milkaat rights and after the death of Parsan Singh, Ram Prasad Singh and Ram Saran Singh, their sons, as survivors acquired the same rights therein, and because they had run into debts and the share spoken of was in Satana Zarpeshgi lease (usufructuary mortgage) of Jhandoo Mahton and Chhaterdhari Mahton, so, in order to pay off the debt of Jhandoo Mahto and Chhaterdhari Mahton all the members of the joint family sold half of it, i. e., 6 annas 6 dams and 5 kuuris, under sale-deed dated 13th July 1903, corresponding to Sawan 1310 F. to defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and after the purchase the names of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were entered in the Land Registration Register and from that time up till now they are in possession. Statements of the plaintiff contrary to this are entirely false.

The Courts below have held that this written statement does not contain any clear and specific acknowledgment of the bond in suit. It is true that the explicit reference is to the Satana Zarpeshgi lease. But paragraph 6 of the written statement in the present suit shows that it included the bond now in suit. This statement was made before the expiry of the period prescribed for the suit, signed by the party to be charged. It is then an acknowledgment of the debt and it a sufficient acknowledgment of An acknowledgment that a debt was due, without more, will be held to imply a promise to pay: Mani Ram v. Seth Rup Chand (1). On the other hand, the statement that three was a debt but it has been discharged, is not sufficient: Rangswami Chetti v. Thirugavelu Chetti (2). The present case seems to stand somewhere between these two. There is an acknowledgment that there was a mortgage.

There is no express statement that it was discharged; but there is a statement that, in order to pay it off, a sale was effected on the 13th July 1903 and since that date the vendees have been in possession of the property. The inference to be drawn from this will at least negative the implication of a promise to pay. The fact that it has been proved to the satisfaction of the Courts below that the alleged sale was not effective is immaterial, as we are concerned only with the form of the acknowledgment. It seems to me, reading the statement as a whole, that it is impossible to say that it has satisfied any of the tests laid down in Maniram Seth v. Seth Rupchand (1). It is not an acknowledgment from which an absolute promise to pay can be inferred, nor is it an unconditional promise to pay the specific debt, nor is it a conditional promise to pay the debt with evidence that the condition has been performed. The case seems to me to be somewhat similar to the case of Ram Das v. Birjundun Das (3). There also the acknowledgment relied upon was contained in a written statement in a previous litigation. After reciting the statement, the learned Judges went on to say: "Now that is an acknowledgment of the original making of the mortgage-deed and of possession being taken under it, but the statement goes on to allege the execution subsequently of two other deeds practically superseding the mortgage and altering the relation of parties. Under the terms of Article 148 we do not think that this is a sufficient acknowledgment to save the case from limitation." It is true that in the present case it is not said that the mortgage was superseded by the subsequent dealings with the property, but it is said that in order to pay off the mortgage, the property was sold and passed into the possession of the vendees. When it is considered that the mortgage explicitly referred to in the written statement was the usufructuary mortgage, the statement that the possession passed to the vendees under the deed of sale suggests the inference that the liability under the mortgage no longer existed. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the statement cannot be relied upon as an acknowledgment within section 19 of the Indian Limitation Act. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

On C being adjudicated an insolvent, the Official Assignee challenged the alienations as being not bona fide and as being without consideration. Held, (1) that the decision in the insolvency proceedings as to the fraudulent nature of the transaction was not res judicata in the present suit;

JUDGMENT.—This is a curious case which arises out of the rather complicated affairs of a man called Chockalinga Naicker, who was adjudicated insolvent in February 1915. I have had occasion to go into the story at considerable length on another occasion and I need only, for the purposes of the present case, recapitulate the circumstances very briefly. On the 2nd of September 1910, Chockalingam, purported to transfer the lands to Pachaimuthu Naicker for Rs. 2,000. On the 27th of June 1912, Pachaimuthu in his turn transferred them to Ramaswami Naicker, who is closely related in a double way to the insolvent Chockalingam for Rs. 3,000. On the 27th of June 1914, Ramaswami Naicker purported to transfer the lands to Alamelu Ammal for Rs. 4,550. In the course of the insolvency of Chockalingam, the Official Assignee challenged these alienations. He challenged them as being not bona fide and as being without consideration, and the end of that was that I tried a proceeding in which the Official Assignee, as representing the estate of Chockalingam, sued Ramaswami Naicker and Alamelu Ammal jointly in order to get it declared that these transactions must be set aside for want of good faith and like considerations. In those proceedings Ramaswami Naicker and Alamelu had exactly the same interest, viz., to resist contentions of the Official Assignee on those points. They failed. It was held by me that the garnishee had not shown that the purchasers in good faith, and unused expressions which indicated,

RAMASWAMY NAICKER v. ALAMELU AMMAL

let us say, some suspicion as to whether the purchases were for valuable consideration. But, reading my own judgment, it seems to me to be clear that I took very good care not to decide that point. It went on appeal and my decision was confirmed by the late Chief Justice and Napier, J., and, no doubt, they did use language which went a good deal further than mine with regard to the question of consideration or want of consideration. The present Chief Justice who decided this case on the Original Side, has indicated the view that, even if the Appellate Court must be taken to have expressed the opinion that there was no consideration in that case, having regard to the fact that they agreed with the finding on which I dismissed the suit, namely, that there was a lack of good faith, that was the real ground of decision and that the other ground was obiter dictum being a mere expression of opinion not necessary for the decision of the case. The suit which was tried by the Chief Justice arose in this way. That was a suit brought by Alamelu Ammal against the vendor Ramaswami Naicker and she said, "Here is this conveyance in my favour. I have been ousted by the action taken by the Official Assignee. You must indemnify me for the loss on my bargain and pay me damages based on the value of the land at the time that you failed to carry out your undertaking as embodied in the covenant for quiet enjoyment which is part of the sale-deed." To that the only answer that is vouchsafed is this—at least that is the only point pressed before us—that, because the Court in those proceedings had to try whether there was a valid transfer away from the estate of Chockalingam and whether the lady Alamelu Ammal and Ramaswami Naicker, who were the garnishees who were resisting the attack in that case, were free from the charge of having in their hands property belonging to the insolvent's estate, it must be considered that the Court decided in that case that the transaction was a fraudulent one for all purposes and that their determination in those proceedings was binding in these proceedings against the twogarnishees. It is clear that, in certain circumstances, a judgment may be as res judicata as between two co-defendants when they litigate against one another subsequently. That doctrine, while recognised, is strictly circumscribed both by the

and by the Indian Law. The locus classicus is the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Wigram in Cottingham v. Earl of Shewsbury (1) where he says this: "If a plaintiff cannot get at his right without trying and deciding a case between co-defendants, the Court will try and decide that case, and the co-defendants will be bound. But if the relief given to the plaintiff does not require or involve a decision of any case between co-defendants, the co-defendants will not be bound as between each other by any proceeding which may be necessary only to the decree the plaintiff obtains." That principle was acted on and carried out in Ramaswamy Iyar v. Ponnuswami (2), a Letters Patent Appeal, where a Bench of three Judges, the present Chief Justice, Oldfield, J., and myself, held that the principle was well-established that there could be no estoppel created between co-defendants so as to invoke the doctrine of res judicata unless there was a litis contestatis as between those defendants inter se. There is no tract of such a thing here and we must, therefore, hold that the judgment of the Appellate Court in the former Insolvency Petition No. 62 of 1915, does not so act in this case, and as the learned Chief Justice points out, it may very well be that, even supposing that this lady was consciously intermeddling in these somewhat murky affairs of Chockalingam, she had a conveyance direct from Ramaswami Naicker as a guarantee that, if anything went wrong with the estate of Chockalingam, he would stand to her in the position of an indemnifier. One must not forget that Ramaswami Naicker was the son-in-law and brother-in-law of this Chockalingam. That seems to me to be quite sufficient to explain this transaction without any supposition at all that they must necessarily be engaged in a common fraud. Even if one has a suspicion of that kind, on the principle of Prole v. Wiggins (3), which has been acted upon in this Court in Kamayya v. Mamayya (4), it would not be possible to act on it here; because the plaintiff, having proved a conveyance containing a covenant for quiet enjoyment, the defendant could not be heard to say: "That was all a sham; that conveyance was not between me and her at all; it was a fraudulent transfer effected with intent to defeat the creditors of Chockalingam by putting my name as benamidar." On the principle that one Allegans suam trupitudinem non est audiendus the defendant will not be allowed to set up that case.

In my opinion, the learned Chief Justice came to the right conclusion in this case and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) s. 48, applicability of—Mortgage by occupancy tenant—Kabuliyat in favour of Mortgagee—Mortgagor whether under-raiyat.

An occupancy tenant executed a Zarpeshgi deed in respect of a portion of his occupancy holding for a period of nine years in consideration of an advance in cash in favour of the plaintiff. The latter was to enter into possession and take the profits arising out of the cultivation of the land in lieu of interest on the loan. In the event of the principal sum not being paid off at the end of the term, the zarpeshgidar was to remain in possession upon the condition stipulated in the deed until repayment of the principal in Jeth of any succeeding year. The property was also hypothecated to secure re-payment of the principal sum advanced if the zarpeshgidar should be dispossessed. Two days later the mortgagor executed a kabuliyat in favour of the mortgagee whereby he took the mortgaged land on lease for 9 years at a certain rent.

Held, (1) that the zarpeshgi was a mortgage and not a lease;

(2) that the zarpeshgidar did not become a raiyat under the mortgage;

(3) that, consequently, the mortgagor did not become an under-raiyat under the mortgage;

(1) that, therefore, section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case and the mortgagor was bound to pay the rent stipulated for in the kabuliyat.

Case law discussed.

Mr. A. B. Mukharji, for Mr. B. N. Mitter, for the Appellant.

Mr. Jadubans Sahai, for the Respondents.

Dawson Miller, C. J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the 'plaintiff' under the Letters Patent from a decision of Mr. Justice Ross reversing the decision of the District Judge and restoring that of the Munsif.

The facts out of which the suit arises are as follows:—On the 16th January 1917, Ram Piyar Bind, the father and predecessor in, rest of the defendant, executed a zarpeshgi deed for a term of 9 years from 1324 F. over 2 bighas 7 cottahs 12 dhurs of his occupancy holding in favour of the plaintiff in consideration of an advance of Rs 975. The plaintiff in lieu of interest on the loan was to enter into possession and take the profits arising out of the cultivation of the land after paying the proprietor's rent amounting to Rs. 16 odd. In the event of the principal sum not being paid off at the end of the term, the zarpeshgidar was to remain in possession upon the condition stipulated in the deed until repayment of the principal in Jeth of any succeeding year. The property was also hypothecated to secure re-payment of the principal sum advanced if the zarpeshgidar should be dispossessed. Two days later, Ram Piyar Bind executed a kabuliyat in favour of his mortgagee. This document recites the previous zarpeshgi transaction and states that the zarpeshgidar has been in possession of the property and as the mortgagor wished to keep the property under his own cultivation paying the zarpeshgidar Rs. 75-7-0 annually as rent the latter had acceded to his request and granted him a lease for 9 years from 1324 to 1333 F. at a rent named. The rent so arrived at was assumed to include the Rs. 16 odd payable to the landlord and interest amounting roughly to 6 per cent. on the principal sum advanced. In the year 1919 the rent was in arrears and Piya Bind having died the plaintiff instituted the present suit against his sons the defendants.

The defendants challenged the genuineness of the kabuliyat and pleaded payment of a smaller rent amounting to Rs. 24-7-0 which they contended was all that was payable according to the Survey khata. They further pleaded that their father was an old man with a disordered brain and was incapable of understanding the terms of the kabuliyat. The genuineness of the zarpeshgi executed two days earlier was not challenged in the written statement.

The Munsif rejected the plea of payment. He held that the only rent recoverable was that recorded in the Survey khata, namely, Rs. 24-7-0 and stated that he thought the plaintiff had succeeded in getting the kabuliyat executed but he had great doubt as to the genuineness of the transaction. It appears that at the recent Revisional Survey the Assistant Settlement Officer had entered the rent in the Record of Rights as Rs. 27-7-0 being of opinion that the plaintiff was the raiyyat and Piya Bind his under-raiyyat and that, under section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff could not recover from his under-raiyyat more than 50 per cent. in excess of the rent payable by him to his superior landlord.

The plaintiff appealed to the District Judge who considered that the Assistant Settlement Officer and the Munsif had proceeded upon an incorrect application of section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that Piya Bind by executing the zarpeshgi did not lose his original status of a raiyyat. He accordingly varied the decree of the Trial Court and entered judgment for the plaintiff for the amount claimed with costs in both Courts.

The defendants preferred a second appeal to the High Court which came before Mr. Justice Ross. The learned Judge was of opinion that the zarpeshgi deed was both a lease and a mortgage and that the plaintiff in this transaction held directly under the landlord and not by way of sub-lease under raiyyat and that Piya Bind ceased raiyyat as long as the lease was out against him. He further considered that the kabuliyat did not create a lease of the rayati interest of the land in the original rayat but that he was an under-rayat of the plaintiff, and that section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was applicable in the circumstances of the case. He accordingly set aside the decree of the District Judge with costs and restored that of the Munsif.

From that decision the present appeal has been preferred under the Letters Patent by the plaintiff.

In my opinion the zarpeshgi was an instrument of mortgage and not a lease. The sum advanced was not paid by the zarpeshgidar as rent payable in advance for a certain period at the end of which the land was to be delivered up to the lessor. The profits, after deducting the proportionate amount of rent payable to the landlord, were to be taken as interest on the principal sum and even at the end of the term the zarpeshgidar was to remain in possession upon the same conditions until the principal sum should be re-paid; and the property was hypothecated for re-payment of the loan in the event of the zarpeshgidar being dispossessed. I think it is well established that a mortgagee, which I consider the zarpeshgidar was in this case, is not the tenant of his mortgagor. In fact, in argument before us it was conceded that the mortgagee is not a raiyyat. It was contended, however, that Piya Bind and consequently the defendants were under-raiyyats within the meaning of the definition of that term in section 4 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which defines under-raiyyats as "Tenants holding whether immediately or mediately under raiyyats." It was argued that Piya Bind held if not immediately at least mediately under himself as a raiyyat and was, therefore, an under-raiyyat. I am unable to accede to the view that a person who is a raiyyat can also be his own under-raiyyat. I agree with the view of the District Judge that the mortgagor by the zarpeshgi transaction never ceased to be the rayat holding under the landlord and he cannot, in such circumstances, be said to be an under-raiyyat holding indirectly under himself.

A further point was raised that Piya Bind was found to be incapable of understanding effect of the kabuliyat. There is no definite finding of the Munsif upon this point and the matter does not appear to have been urged in appeal before the District Judge as a defence to the suit. Moreover, the defendants having remained in possession of the land under the kabuliyat cannot now be heard to say that it was not a genuine transaction. In my opinion the appeal should be allowed, the decree of Ross, J. should be set aside and that of the District Judge restored. The appellants are entitled to their costs of this appeal and of the appeal before Mr. Justice Ross.

Mullick, J.—On the 16th January 1917, Ram Peari Bind, the predecessor of the defendants, executed a zarpeshgi deed in respect of 2 bighas 7 kathas 12 dhurs of kasht land in favour of the plaintiff for a consideration of Rs. 975. On the 18th January of the same year Ram Peari executed a kabuliyat for the land in favour of the plaintiff reserving a rent of Rs. 75-5-0 per annum for a term of 9 years from 1324 to 1333 F. S. In 1919 the defendants defaulted in the payment of the reserved rent in respect of the year 1325 and of part of the year 1326 and the plaintiff brought the present suit for recovery thereof.

The Munsif decreed the suit at a rate of Rs. 24-7-0 per annum relying on a Record of Rights prepared under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

On appeal the District Judge of Chapra set aside the decree of the Munsif and held that the defendants were not under-raiyyats and that, therefore, section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case and he decreed the suit at the full rate claimed.

There was a second appeal then to this Court and Mr. Justice Ross has reversed the decree of the District Judge and restored that of the Munsif.

The present appeal is preferred under the Letters Patent against the judgment of Mr. Justice Ross.

Now the first question is what was the effect of the zarpeshgi deed of the 16th January 1917. If it was a lease and not a mortgage, then the plaintiff became an under-raiyyat of the first degree under Ram Peari Bind who in turn, by the kabuliyat of the 18th January, became an under-raiyyat of the second degree under the plaintiff. In the case section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act would operate to preclude the plaintiff from recovering from his under-raiyyat more than 50 per cent. in excess of the rent payable by him to his superior landlord, that is to say, more than a total rent of Rs. 24-7-0 as recorded by the Settlement Officer.

If, on the other hand, the zarpeshgi transaction was not a lease but a mortgage then the kabuliyat of the 18th January 1917 operated to create a raiyyati tenancy and section 48 would have no application.

The view taken by the learned Judge of this Court is, that the transaction was both a lease and a mortgage. It seems to me that, even in that case, the transferee would be neither a raiyyat nor an under-raiyyat.

I am, however, of opinion that the document does not create any raiyyati tenancy at all. The transfer in this case was for the purpose of securing the payment of money advanced and was not consideration for a price paid. The sum of Rs. 975 did not represent either wholly or in part an advance payment for the rent of the land. The deed recites that the transferee is to pay to the superior landlord the rental due from the raiyyat which was a sum of Rs. 16-6-0 and that he was to pay himself the interest upon the mortgage money out of the proceeds of the land, and it is very similar to a zarpeshgi deed which was the subject of Ram Khelawan Roy v. Sambhoo Roy (1). In that case the whole of the rent for a period of five years was to be taken by the zarpeshgidars on account of the profits of their zarpeshgi excepting one rupee which was to be paid yearly by them to the proprietors, (the grantors) and if the zarpeshgi money was not paid at the end of the five years the zarpeshgidars were to remain in possession until payment. The decision was that the deed did not create a raiyyati tenancy.

On the other hand, it was held in Ramdhari Singh v. Mackenzie (2), that where the raiyyat was already previously in possession as a raiyyat he does not divest himself of his right to acquire a right of occupancy in the land by taking a zarpeshgi lease of the land.

Again, in Damodar Narain Chowdhry v.

W. N. 851.

SHIB DEO SINGH v. UTTAM SINGH

Dalglish (3), it was held that a sarpeshgi lease which merely provided for a part of the rent to be paid in advance, there being no stipulation for the payment of interest on the money so advanced, did not create the relationship of mortgagor and mortgagee.

In the present case the contract was not merely for the cultivation of the land but also constituted a real and valid security to the transferee for the principal sum advanced by him and for the interest thereon and his possession was not merely that of a cultivator but of a creditor holding the land as security. In these circumstances, the transferee was a mortgagee and not a raiyyat within the meaning of section 5, clause (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It follows, therefore, that by executing the kabuliyat of the 18th January 1917, Ram Peari Bind did not become a tenant holding immediately or mediately under a raiyyat, and section 48 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not applicable.

For the purposes of this case it is immaterial whether the sarpeshgi and the kabuliyat constituted one transaction or two separate transactions and Chimman Lal v. Bahadur Singh (4), has no application to the present case.

Nor does the decision in Uttam Chandra Das v. Rajkrishna Dalal (5), on which the learned Judge of this Court relies assist the defendants. In this last mentioned case a proprietor executed a sarpeshgi mortgage in favour of the defendants who on the same day re-settled the land with the proprietor as tenants. The mortgagor having defaulted in payment of rent the mortgagee sued for it, obtained a decree and in execution purchased the equity of redemption and took possession of the property. The plaintiffs alleged that they were purchasers of the equity of redemption from the mortgagors and filed a suit for redemption. The principal point decided in that case by a Full Bench was that the sale was not void but voidable and that, although the mortgagee had purchased the equity of redemption in contravention of the terms of section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the sale was not a nullity and must be duly avoided and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to redeem so long as it subsisted. One of the points in the case was whether the sale was held in execution of a rent-decree or whether it was merely a sale in execution of a decree for arrears of interest upon the mortgage-money. Mr. Justice Chattejea, in the course of his judgment, observed that by executing the kabuliyat in favour of the mortgagee the mortgagor had become the tenant of the mortgagee within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If I may say so, the facts found in that case entirely supported this view and the mortgagor became a raiyyat by reason of the terms of section 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, when read together with the definition of proprietor in the Act which includes a trustee. But a mortgagee from an occupancy raiyyat is not in any sense a raiyyat or under-raiyyat and a sub-tenant under him cannot be an under-raiyyat.

A point was taken in the Trial Court that there had been no intelligent execution of the kabuliyat by Ram Peari Bind. This defence does not appear to have been repeated before the District Judge and the point is no longer open.

The result is that the judgment of Mr. Justice Ross must be set aside and that of the District Judge restored. The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court.

Lala Amar Nath Chopra, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Bhagat, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Certain property belonging to one Sardar Jhanda Singh was attached in the execution of a money decree against the said Sardar. Thereupon his minor son, Sardar Shib Dev Singh, instituted a suit asking for a declaration to the effect that the property in question was not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the said decree inasmuch as under Customary Law he was a reversioner and that alienations could not be effected of ancestral property, such as this, except for the benefit of the family and legal necessity. This suit was based on the customary rights of reversioners and it was alleged that an objection under O. XXI, r. 58, Civil Procedure Code, to the attachment and sale had been made but dismissed. The Trial Court framed four issues but decided the case on the fourth, which is to the following effect:—

"Is the suit not entertainable according to law or custom?"

He held that the suit was premature.

The minor plaintiff has come up to this Court in appeal through Mr. A. N. Chopra, and we have heard Mr. Bhagat for the respondents.

It appears to us that the appeal must fail. The reversioner's interest is only a contingent one and the mere attachment does not in any way affect injuriously his reversionary rights. It has been urged that, inasmuch as the appellant's objections were rejected under r. 63 of O. XXI, the decision must be regarded as final unless set aside by a suit. Even assuming that this view be correct, and that it be finally held that the reversioner cannot object to the attachment of the property, there would be nothing, as far as we can see, to prevent the appellant from taking such action as is necessary to safeguard any reversionary rights he may have in the property when the property is sold.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Partition—Separation of some members, effect of—Division inter se—Two co-parceners joining in partition suit, effect of—Guardian of minor co-parceners, whether can effect severance inter se.

Where a partition takes place under a decree of Court, the effect of the decree on the remaining co-parceners must be determined by the terms of the decree or by the scope of the suit.

Palaniammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Mamiagar, 43 Ind. Cas. 833; 33 M. L. J. 759, followed.

The mere fact that two co-parceners combine to ask for a partition does not indicate an intention on their part to become divided inter se.

Balakrishna Mudaliar v. Raju Mudaliar, 27 I. C. 736, 16 M. L. T. 610; (1915) M. W. N. 17, dissented from.

A guardian of two undivided minors has no power to divide their status so as to make them lose their rights of survivorship inter se.

Where two minor brothers by their next friend sued their father for partition of their 2/3rds share in the family property and the decree gave them an undivided 2/3rds share;

Held, that the plaintiffs remained undivided inter se and on the death of one his interest survived to the other.

SENGODA GOUNDAN v. MUTHU GOUNDAN

Second appeal against the decrees of the District Court of Salem, in A. S. No. 45 of 1921, preferred against the decree of the Court of the District Munsif of Namakkal, in O. S. No. 1269 of 1918.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswamy Ayyar, for the Appellant:—In this case two Hindu sons sued their father for partition and obtained a decree. The question for decision is whether the plaintiff's brothers were not divided inter se. It has now been definitely held by the recent decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Jatti v. Banwari Lal (1), that where one member of a joint family separates there is no jointness amongst the rest. An agreement to remain united or to be reunited has to be proved as a question of fact, thus setting at rest the interpretation of the passages in the two early decisions of the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2), and Balkrishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (3). See also Balakrishna Mudaliar v. Raju Mudaliar (4), where their Lordships Sadasiva Aiyar and Napier, JJ., hold that the separation of one member prima facie effects a separation amongst other members.

In this view, the decision of this Court in Palaniammal v. Muthuvenkatchala Maniagar (5), has to be restricted to the facts of that case.

Further, the reported decisions to the contrary view are all cases of one member separating, the question arising of separation or jointness amongst the rest, but the question has not arisen of division amongst the separating members themselves. The presumption of division enunciated by the Privy Council is particularly applicable. In the present case the separating members are minors and if the presumption is one of division there can be no reunion or agreement to live joint: see Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2).

Again, under the Hindu Law it is inconceivable, except in the case of a father, that two persons can bring a suit for partition against another, themselves being joint. The right to partition is a personal right and has been held to be intransferable. So it has been held that a suit by an alien of a co-parcener's share for partition is not strictly a suit for partition in the technical sense in which the word is used in the Mitakshara.

A suit for partition in the technical sense can be brought only by an undivided member of the family. The right to it is personal and not transferable. Ayyar v. Venkatarammaya v. Ayyagari Ramayya (6). The individual and personal right to partition cannot be presumed to have been collectively and jointly used. It was merely accidental that one suit was brought by the two brothers instead of two. The brothers were clearly divided in status.

Mr. V. N. Venkatarachari, for the Respondents:—When one member of a joint family separates, there is no presumption that the rest are joint or divided. The question is really one of fact. The Privy Council case in Jatti Ram v. Banwari Lal (1), is and purports to be a decision on the facts of the case. So are the three early decisions of the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rukhmabai (2), Balkrishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (3), Ram Pershad Singh v. Lakshpati Koer (7). The decision in Rangasami Naidu v. Sundararajulu Naidu, (8) is exactly in point. The question of partition is one of intention and cannot be decided on mere presumptions of law. Also the case in Palaniammal v. Muthuvenkatchala Maniagar (5). These decisions have been followed in a long series of decisions here in Madras and elsewhere and the Privy Council decision in Jatti v. Banwari Lal (1), has far from changed the law. It has merely emphasised the position that the question is one of fact.

Further, the plaintiffs here were minors and a division inter se amongst them cannot be presumed without the matter having been brought to the notice of the Court at the time of the division. It is beyond the powers of the guardian to effect a separation between the two minors. The Court has to consider and exercise its discretion in allowing a partition. The Privy Council decision in Ram Pras d Singh v. Lakhputi Koer (7), at 9 and 10, is clear authority for the position that two co-parceners may sue for partition against the rest of the family and yet remain undivided. It is submitted the finding of fact of the Courts below that the brothers were joint is not open to any legal objections.

JUDGMENT.

The Acting Chief Justice:—This suit is for partition and the question argued before us relates to the plaintiff's claim to succeed to the share of his deceased minor brother by right of survivorship. There was a previous suit by the plaintiff and his brother, both being minors represented by next friend, for partition, which ended in a compromise decree, Ex. A, dated 24th November 1915. It has been argued before us that, when two persons ask for a partition, it should be implied that they intend to get divided from each other as well as from the joint family to which they belong. Nothing can be gathered from the fact that in the former suit the minor plaintiffs combined to ask for a partition as to their intention to become divided inter se. The right to obtain a partition, though personal, happened to be common to both the plaintiffs and common questions of law and fact arose out of there suing. The mere fact that there was one trial and one decree in the former suit was a consequence of procedure applicable to persons suing under the same cause of action rather than conduct showing an intention to become separated inter se.

In Musammatt Jatti v. Banwari Lal (1), the Privy Council quoted a former decision by that body, Balabux v. Rukmabai (2), in which Lord Davey remarked that there was no presumption when a co-parcener separates from others that the latter remained united. The agreement to remain united must be proved like any other fact. The Privy Council did not say that there was no presumption in such a case that the other co-parceners became divided, as it was not necessary to do so for that decision. But it seems to me that such is the case. In Rangaswami Naidu v. Sundararajulu Naidu (8), it was held that the separation of one member of a co-parcenary was not necessarily a separation of the remaining members, and in Palaniammal v. Muthurenkatachala Maniagar (5), Sir John Wallis, C. J., and my learned brother held that, if a partition takes place under a decree of Court, the effect of the decree on the remaining co-parceners must be determined by the terms of decree or by the scope of the suit. I think that Sadasiva Aiyar, J., went too far in Balakrishna Mudaliar v. Raju Mudaliar (4), in observing that there was a presumption that, when one of several co-parceners has become divided, the others also have become divided in status. The Privy Council decisions to which he referred do not support such a proposition.

If the effect of the former decree is to be determined by terms of it, we find from Ex. A that in the former suit both the plaintiff and his brother had the same next friend to represent them and the decree speaks of their two-thirds share, not of their properties as two shares, each representing one-third of the whole. There was no order that their two-thirds share should be divided into separate shares and no authority has been shown for a guardian of two undivided minors dividing their status so as to make them lose their rights of survivorship to each other. The District Judge observes that the plaintiff and his brother did not sue for division inter se and that the decree does not divide their shares, and he formed a conclusion from their conduct that they remained undivided, agreeing with the first Court on that point. I see no reason to interfere with that finding on any point of law. I would, therefore, confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and, as the other grounds of second appeal are untenable and have not been seriously pressed, this second appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The memorandum of objections which relates to mesne profits anterior to the date of the institution of the suit, is dismissed with costs.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—I agree with my Lord. I think there is no authority for holding that, where two members of a joint family sue for partition, it necessarily divides inter se. The observations of the Privy Council in Balabux v. Rukmabai (2), and the decisions of this Court in Rangaswami Naidu v. Sundararajulu Naidu (8) and Palaniammal v. Muthuvenkatachala Maniagar (5), are clearly against that contention.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Hyderabad (Sind), dated 9th August 1920.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gopaldas Jhamatmal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point involved in this appeal is whether a decree-holder by becoming the purchaser of the property of the judgment-debtor in execution of his decree ceases to be a party to the suit in which the decree was passed.

Some agricultural lands, consisting of sixteen Survey Nos., were purchased in execution of a mortgage-decree at a Court-sale by the decree-holder. With regard to ten of them after the purchase he obtained possession through the Revenue authorities, in respect of the remaining six however, though he obtained the sale certificate, yet it has been found, notwithstanding his allegation to the contrary, that he never obtained possession of them. The suit out of which this appeal arises was for possession of all the sixteen Survey Nos. on the allegation that plaintiff had been dispossessed of them. The 1st Class Sub-Judge of Hyderabad decreed possession of the ten Survey Nos. but held the suit barred in respect of the remaining six as he was of opinion that the remedy of the plaintiff was not by a suit but in execution proceedings. Plaintiffs' appeal against this findings.

We are in entire agreement with the view of the lower Court that the appellant had never obtained possession of these six Survey Nos. and his evidence that he had is clearly unreliable.

The point now before us is whether the suit in respect of these six Survey Nos. is barred by section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

In arriving at the conclusion that it did, the lower Court was mainly guided by the judgment in the case reported in Sadhashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vitthal (1), the facts of which are identical with the present case. It was held that a decree-holder by becoming a purchaser at a Court-sale did not cease to be a party to the suit within the meaning of section 47, Civil Procedure Code, and that proceedings for delivery of possession of property purchased by the decree-holder were proceedings in execution of the decree and fell within the scope of section 47, Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Kimatrai, for the appellants pointed out to us that that the judgment in the case cited had been doubted in Goba Nathu v. Sakharu Tepi (2). No doubt, in this case Macleod, C. J., did express himself as follows: "For myself I feel inclined to doubt the decision in Sadashiv Mahadu v. Narayan Vitthal (1)". The two cases are, however, entirely distinguishable. For there was another party claiming the property purchased who was not a party to the original suit and plaintiff would have to proceed in execution proceedings against one defendant and file a suit against the other.

In Madhusudan Das v. Gohinda Pria (3) it was held that a decree-holder was none the less a party to the suit because he happens to be an auction-purchaser. In this case there was, on the one side, the plaintiff who was both the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser, and, on the other side, the representatives of the judgment-debtor, and it was observed that proceedings for delivery of possession were proceedings in execution of the decree.

In Sheo Narain v. Nur Mahomed (4), it was held that where the decree-holder himself purchased property at auction-sale held in execution of his own decree but fails to obtain possession, his remedy is by application under section 244, Civil Procedure Code, and he cannot bring a separate suit for possession. This judgment was, however, overruled by a Full Bench of the same Court in Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (5), where it was held that section 244 was not a bar to such a suit.

In Abdul Gani v. Raja Ram (6), the judgment was of a Full Bench of the Patna High Court, the Court was of the opinion that they should not, without strong reasons, differ from the series of decisions of the Calcutta High Court that a suit such as the one above described was barred by section 244, Civil Procedure Code.

There is no doubt as to the variance of opinion in different High Courts as to whether section 47 of the present Code, corresponding with section 244 of the Code of 1882, operates so as to bar a suit for recovery of possession in the circumstances mentioned.

The point seems not yet decided by our High Court.

In Prosunno Kumar Sangal v. Kalidas Sanyal (7), the Privy Council observed as follows: "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution-sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244. Appellant was the decree-holder and he purchased the property in execution of his decree. The decree could not be deemed satisfied till he obtained possession of the property purchased by him. The circumstance that he became an auction-purchaser did not render him the less a decree-holder and the question of recovering possession was one that relates to the satisfaction of his decree and, therefore, fell within the purview of section 47, Civil Procedure Code. There is no complete satisfaction of the decree till possession is obtained and although the decree-holder by virtue of his purchase may be clothed in a new garb, yet he still remains a decree-holder till his decree is satisfied and, therefore, still a party to the suit. As observed in Sadashiv v. Narayan Vitthal (1), above referred to, proceedings in execution so far as the decree-holder is concerned are not completed until the decree-holder obtains the benefit of the sale held in execution of the decree. In the present case the decree-holder had not obtained possession and the question between him and the other parties to this suit related to execution, discharge or satisfaction of his decree, and these questions could only be determined by the Court executing his decree and a separate suit was barred. In Bapuchand v. Muglitra (8) it was observed in the judgment by Farran, C. J., following the views of the Allahabad and Madras High Courts, that even when money is paid into a Court in execution of a decree, still the decree is not fully completed till the payment has been actually made to the judgment-creditor or some one on his own account, and on the same principle the execution of the decree cannot be deemed complete until the decree-holder had obtained possession of property purchased by him at the auction sale.

In our opinion, therefore, the decree-holder does not lose his character as a party to the suit merely because he is the auction-purchaser, and the question as to the delivery of possession to him of the property purchased was a question relating to the execution, discharge and satisfaction of his decree and the suit was, therefore, barred. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Custom—Personal law, when to be applied—Court, duty of—Riwaj-i-am, entry in, value of—Mother, whether includes grand-mother—Succession—Uncle v. grand-mother—Sikh Jats of Lahore District.

Among parties generally following Customary law it is permissible to fall back as a last resort on their personal law for the decision of a point on which no definite rule of custom applicable can be found. The function of a Court in matters of disputed custom, is to discover the actual practice and to give effect to it.

The Ruraj-i-am, even when unsupported by instances, is an important piece of evidence in support of the custom which it records to which serious regard must be paid.

The word 'mother' in a riwaj-i-am must be presumed to carry its plain literal meaning, in default of any evidence that it was intended to mean or include somebody else. A grandmother cannot, therefore, be included within the word mother used in a riwaj-i-am.

Among Sikh Jats of the Lahore District a paternal uncle is to be preferred to the grandmother.

Second appeal from the decree of the Additional District Judge, Lahore, dated the 5th August 1920, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, dated the 31st March 1920, and dismissing plaintiff's suit.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nanak Chand, for Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Shankar Rai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of Second Appeals Nos. 2526 and 2631 of 1920, the question for decision in each being the same. That question is, as stated in the Certificate given by the lower Appellate Court under section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts' Act, that of the respective right of a Sikh grandmother and a paternal uncle inter se and of the interpretation and scope of the word 'mother' as given under answer No. 66 of Bolster's Customary Law of the Lahore District.

The following pedigree table elucidates the facts :—

Dhana Singh died first of the sons of Fattah Singh and his estate was inherited in equal shares by Saudagar Singh and Natha Singh. Natha Singh died and was succeeded by Tara Singh. When Tara Singh died his land was mutated half in favour of Saudagar Singh and half in favour of his grandmother Musammat Tabi by an amicable arrangement. Subsequently, each of these persons brought a suit for a declaration that he and she were sole heirs of Tara Singh. Saudagar Singh succeeded in both suits in one of which he was plaintiff and in the other defendant. Musammāt Tabi appealed unsuccessfully to the District Judge and she has now come on second appeal to this Court in each case with a certificate in the terms noted above.

In the Trial Court 12 witnesses were produced by Musammāt Tabi in whose opinion the grandmother is a preferential heir to an uncle, while 17 witnesses for Saudagar Singh deposed that a grandmother is no heir at all in the presence of an uncle. No concrete instance was quoted by either set of witnesses and this evidence is valueless.

The only other evidence is the riwaj-i-am the terms of which are embodied in paragraph 66 of Bolster's Customary Law of the Lahore District. It is there declared that when a man dies without lineal descendants, widow or daughters, his property devolves on the following in order:—

1. Father;
2. Mother;
3. Brothers or their male descendants through males;
4. Paternal uncles of their descendants;
5. Other collaterals;
6. The village community.

This is stated to be the answer of all tribes, but no instances of succession are quoted in the record.

Two contentions are advanced on behalf of Musammāt Tabi before us and they are mutually contradictory. The first, is that in the riwaj-i-am the word 'mother' must be held to include grandmother so that the grandmother stands as regards succession on an equal footing with the mother. The second is that, since no definite rule of custom applicable to the question before the Court can be found, recourse must be had to Hindu Law for a rule and under Hindu Law the grandmother is preferred to the uncle.

This second argument is based on 110 P. R., 1906 but it has no force. What the Full Bench ruled in that case was that, among parties generally following Customary Law it is permissible to fall back as a last resort on their personal law for the decision of a point on which no definite rule of custom applicable can be found. In the present instance there is no gap which cannot be filled otherwise than by a resort to Hindu Law. The riwaj-i-am, even when unsupported by instances, has been ruled by the Privy Council to be an important piece of evidence to which serious regard is to be paid and here, we have the riwaj-i-am which describes the uncle as an heir and does not mention the grandmother at all. There is thus a piece of evidence that, under custom, the uncle is an heir and the grandmother is not. If the contest were between two such persons as the sister's husband and the mother's brother and if there were no evidence on the record except the present riwaj-i-am, then it might be said that there was a gap which could not be filled except by a reference to personal law, and this is manifestly what the learned Judges meant who delivered Daya Ram v. Sohail Singh (1).

On the first point the argument addressed to us amounts to a claim that the word 'mother' should include grandmother because it ought to do so and because a grandmother is an heir under Hindu Law and thus there would be nothing strange in her being an heir under Punjab Agricultural custom. Under Hindu Law, however, a grandmother does not stand on the same footing as a mother and although she comes before a father's brother she comes after a brother and his descendants to whom the mother is preferred under the rule of custom enunciated in the riwaj-i-am. It is easy to theorize and to speculate as to what the rules of custom should be but the function of a Court, in matters of disputed custom, is to discover the actual practice and to give effect to it. Here not a single instance is discoverable of inheritance by a grandmother in preference to an uncle, and the riwaj-i-am declares the uncle to be an heir and omits all mention of the grandmother. The word 'mother' in the riwaj-i-am must be presumed to carry its plain literal meaning in default of any evidence that it was intended to mean something else. Bricks cannot be made without straw, and there is no material except the words themselves of paragraph 66 of Bolster's Customary Law which enable us to interpret it or explain its scope.

Both appeals, therefore, fail and are dismissed with costs.

A lease is a transfer of property and can be made only by the transferor and not by the transferee. The transfer can only be made by the volition of the transferor, but in the case of a lease for a term exceeding one year the transfer does not become effective until a registered instrument comes into being; the instrument must, however, be effected by the transferor.

Therefore, a registered kabuliya executed by the person occupying the premises and accepted by the person owning the premises is not sufficient to bestow a title upon the person occupying the premises and can in no way be considered a lease as defined in section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Case-law discussed.

Second Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Saharanpur, dated the 25th March 1922.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Stuart, J.—The learned District Judge decided the contentions which we are now considering upon one point. He wrote in his judgment: "The main point for decision is one of law and may be stated in this form—'Is a registered kabuliya executed by the tenant and accepted by the landlord sufficient to create a tenancy?'"

He decided that point only.

The facts were as follows: The plaintiff, who is here the appellant, is the owner of a shop with a shed attached which he leased to a certain Kundan Lal. Kundan

Lal executed a kabuliya in plaintiff-appellant's favour, dated the 19th March 1913, agreeing to occupy these premises on a monthly rental until 1918. It is not clear whether the plaintiff had executed a lease for this period of five years in favour of Kundan Lal. It is of no consequence whether he did or did not execute a lease, for it is admitted that he took no exception to Kundan Lal as a tenant during those five years. His relations with Kundan Lal appear to have been amicable during that period. When that lease came to an end, it is an admitted fact that Kundan Lal executed a registered kabuliya dated the 10th April 1918 by which he agreed to occupy the same premises as tenant for a further period of eleven years on an annual rental of Rs. 200. Kundan Lal continued to occupy the premises and the plaintiff made no objection, as far as we can gather, to his occupation. Kundan Lal died in 1918. After his death the plaintiff instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises against the sons of the deceased Kundan Lal, who had continued to occupy the premises, for possession of the premises, for an amount for use and occupation for the period between their father's death and the date of the suit calculated at the rate at which their father had been paying rent, and for damages at the same rate up to the period that the plaintiff might obtain possession. The learned District Judge did not go into the other points raised between the parties. He did not even decide upon the evidence whether the plaintiff had or had not accepted the kabuliya. He took the view that without considering other evidence the plaintiff must be considered to have accepted the kabuliya on the wording of the plaint and on the wording of a notice issued by the plaintiff's pleader to Kundan Lal's sons dated the 14th April 1919. We do not consider that on the wording of the plaint and the wording of the notice a conclusion can be drawn that the plaintiff accepted the kabuliya of 10th April 1918. The plaint affords no authority for a finding other than that the plaintiff had permitted Kundan Lal to hold over as a tenant from year to year after the first period of five years had come to an end. It does not follow from this that he would extend the same towards Kundan Lal's sons after the death of Kundan Lal. The wording of the notice in no way supports the suggestion that the plaintiff accepted or admitted the kabuliyat and so far there has been no finding on the evidence as to whether, and, if so, how far the plaintiff misled the defendants by his action in permitting Kundan Lal to hold on after the period of five years had come to an end, or, in other words, as to the validity of the plea of estoppel which has been raised by the defendants. The point as to what the plaintiff actually did do or omitted to do and the effect of his acts and omissions upon the merits of the case has not been decided by a finding of fact and, as will be seen from the subsequent portion of this decision, we propose to leave this question, in addition to the other question which so far have not been decided, to the decision of the learned District Judge's successor.

But it is unnecessary for us to remand the case for further findings and await their decision before we decide the only question now before us because we answer in the negative the question which the learned Judge answered in the affirmative. We do not find that the plaintiff accepted the kabuliyat and we express no opinion as to whether he did or did not, but assuming that he accepted the kabuliyat we cannot accept the learned Judge's view as to the law.

The question which we have to decide is one which has been before this and other High Courts on previous occasions and, in so far as this High Court is concerned it, has not so far been decided in explicit terms by a Bench. The first occasion when it arose in a reported decision was when it came before a Bench of this Court in Nand Lal v. Hanuman Das (1). There the defendants who were the occupiers of a house alleged that they could not be ejected therefrom because they held under a lease. What they alleged to be a lease was a registered kabuliyat. It was found in that case that the plaintiffs, the owners of the house, had been fully aware of the execution of the kabuliyat and had given consent to its execution. Blair, J., referred to a decision in a Letters Patent Appeal (this is quoted as a note to the report) in which the view which he had previously taken that a registered kabuliyat even when accepted by the landholder does not constitute a lease was approved by Edge, C. J., and Burkitt, J. He maintained his previous opinion and found that the kabuliyat before him in the appeal which he was then deciding could not operate as a lease. He found for the ejectment of the defendants. Banerji, J., also found in favour of the ejectment but he did not express an opinion upon the point now before us. He is entered in the head-note as having questioned the validity of the opinion of Blair, J., but the hand-note is not accurate on that point as will be seen from the words of Banerji, J. All that he said was this:—

"Having regard to the fact that it is a common practice in these provinces to treat a kabuliyat as the instrument creating a tenancy, and that a ruling such as that contended for by the appellants may unsettle titles, I do not desire to express any opinion upon the first question raised in this appeal."

I fail to understand how, by using these words, the learned Judge could be held to have expressed a doubt as to the correctness of the view of Blair, J. This decision was passed in 1904. A few months later, the same point arose before Blair, J., sitting singly, in Kashu Gir v. Jogendra Nath (Hose) (2). In that case he repeated the view that a lease could not be created by a kabuliyat, and that until a lease or a patta was duly executed and registered in cases in which the law required a registered instrument no lease was created or could be proved. In 1905 the point again came before a Bench of this Court when Blair, J., and Banerji, J., refused, in a case where certain persons claimed to collect market dues under an unregistered lease and a registered kabuliyat, to recognise that claim. The decision clearly was that the lease being unregistered was ineffective and that the kabuliyat although registered did not create a lease. But the point was not decided explicitly. This decision is reported in Sikandar v. Bahadur (3). The point was raised again in 1909 before a Full Bench consisting of Stanley, C. J., and Banerji and Aikman, JJ. Their decision is reported in Sheo Kuran Singh v. Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (4).

KEDAR NATH v. SHANKER LAL

The point was not decided. The question was not raised in the form before us. The appeal related to a suit for arrears of rent on the basis of a registered kabuliyat. The defendants who were tenants of the Maharaja of Benares were let in to occupation of a tenancy on a registered kabuliyat. The Maharaja sued them for arrears of rent and they set up that they could not be made to pay rent because, as the Maharaja had not executed a lease, they were not liable to pay anything. This plea did not find favour with the Assistant Collector who heard the suit. He decreed the claim. The plea which was advanced before the High Court was that a kabuliyat was equivalent to a counter-part and that there could not be a counter-part without a lease. Thus, there being no lease, the kabuliyat was waste paper and the defendants were not liable to pay rent at all. The defendants-appellants endeavoured to press into their favour the decisions which I have already quoted and asked the Court to take the view that as a lease could not be created by a kabuliyat a tenant who had agreed to pay rent by a registered instrument was under no liability to pay rent at all. The Full Bench decided this plea in the following words:—

“The only ground of appeal which has been pressed in argument before us is the first, namely, that a kabuliyat without a patta does not create a valid lease of immovable property. As to this we express no opinion, inasmuch as we find that, under the circumstances, the plaintiff is clearly entitled to recover compensation for use and occupation.”

They added that they expressed no opinion as to the correctness of the rulings which had already been cited. I fail to understand from the wording of this decision that the learned Judges who composed the Bench dissented from the view taken by Blair, J. The matter was raised again before me as a single Judge in 1916. My decision is reported in Bijai Narain Singh v. Sri Maharaja Parbhu Narain Singh (5). The point taken in the present appeal was not material to my decision in that appeal and I expressed no view upon the point which is now before us. The learned Counsel for the respondents in this appeal has been unable to show us any decision of our own Court in which a view has been taken differing from or questioning the law as laid down by Blair, J., and by the Bench which decided Sikandar v. Bahadur (3), and it would appear to me that upon the principle of “stare decisis” this Bench would not be competent to accept the view taken by the learned District Judge of Saharanpur and if they differed from the view taken in the past should refer the point for the decision of a Full Bench. It has been urged upon us by the learned Counsel for the respondents that in view of certain decisions in the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta, we should refuse to follow the view taken by our own Court. He relies in particular upon a decision of the Full Bench of the High Court at Madras passed in 1910, Syed Ajam Sahib v. Anantha Narayana Aiyar, (6) and a decision of a Bench of the Calcutta High Court, Raimani Dassi v. Mathura Mohan Dey (7). In deference to the views of the learned Judges who decided those appeals I propose to say something more. I refer to the provisions of Act IV of 1882 to show what a lease is in India and how a valid lease can be created by the Indian Law. Section 105 of that Act states:—

“A lease of immovable property is a transfer of a right to enjoy such property, made for a certain time, express or implied, or in perpetuity, in consideration of a price paid or promised, or of money, a share of crops, service or any other thing of value, to be rendered periodically or on specified occasions to the transferor by the transferee, who accepts the transfer on such terms.

“The transferor is called the lessor, the transferee is called the lessee, the price is called the premium and the money, share, service or other thing to be so rendered is called the rent.”

Section 107 commences:—

“A lease of immovable property from year to year, or for any term exceeding one year, or reserving a yearly rent, can be made only by a registered instrument.”

KEDAR NATH v. SHANKER LAL

Thus, in order to create a valid title to occupation of premises, the property of another person, for a term exceeding one year by lease a registered instrument is necessary. A lease is a transfer. A transfer must obviously be made by the transferor. It cannot be made by the transferee. So the owner of the premises must make the transfer. The transfer can be only made by his volition, but that transfer does not become effective in case of a lease for a term exceeding one year until a registered instrument comes in to being. The argument on the other side is apparently that the owner must make the transfer, but the registered instrument creating the transfer, which is essential to the validity of a title in such cases, can be made by the transferee. How is this possible? Surely, if such is the case, the transfer itself is made by the transferee and is accepted by the transferor. I observe that both in Calcutta and Madras stress has been laid upon the terms of section 2, clause (7) of the Registration Act, old Act III of 1877. Clause (7) of section 2 states that a lease includes a counter-part, kabuliyat, an undertaking to cultivate or occupy, and an agreement to lease. From this it is argued that the word "lease" includes kabuliyat and that a kabuliyat is a lease. I understand the meaning of the words, however, to be that for purposes of registration a counter-part, kabuliyat, an undertaking to cultivate or occupy, and an agreement to lease are put in the same category as a lease, in other words that an undertaking to cultivate or occupy from year to year ordinarily requires registration under the provisions of section 17. I do not understand these words to suggest that what is known as a lease under the law is the same thing as an undertaking to cultivate, and that the substantive law relating to leases can be applied to undertakings to cultivate by substituting the words "undertaking to cultivate" for "lease" wherever the word "lease" occurs in legislative enactments other than the Registration Act. It is true that section 4, Act IV of 1882, lays down that section 107 of that Act is to be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act. I understand those words to mean that the provisions in section 107 relating to registration were intended to supersede and to absorb the provisions relating to registration of leases which were contained in the Registration Act that had been passed five years earlier. For these reasons, taking the view of the law which I consider to be the view that has always been accepted in this Court, and finding no reason to refer the point to a Full Bench, I should answer the District Judge's question in the negative and decide that a registered kabuliyat executed by the person occupying the premises and accepted by the person owning the premises is not sufficient to bestow title upon the person occupying the premises and can in no way be considered a lease as defined in section 105 of Act IV of 1882. The result of this decision would be that this appeal would succeed and the District Judge's decision upon a preliminary point of law having been reversed, the case would be sent back to his successor for restoration to its original number and decision on the merits upon the other points.

Mukerji, J. :—I entirely agree with what has fallen from my learned brother. I wish to add just a few words. In arriving at the conclusion at which I have arrived, namely, the same conclusion at which my learned brother has arrived, I have not overlooked the fact that in this country the custom largely prevails of creating leases, rather attempting to create them, by means of a mere kabuliyat or a document executed by the intending lessee alone. What we have to do, however, is merely to interpret the law as it stands. In interpreting the law as we have done, it is satisfactory to note, we are not interfering with a large number of kabuliyat and leases which relate to agricultural holdings. By the express provisions of section 117 of the Transfer of Property Act the provisions in Chapter V of that Act do not apply to agricultural leases.

Lastly, I would observe that we have decided merely a point of law. If, apart from the kabuliyat, the defendants can show any good reasons, for being allowed to continue to occupy the premises in suit, they would still be entitled to show those reasons before the lower Appellate Court. I, therefore, concur in the order proposed.

Order by the Court :—The appeal is allowed. As the Court from whose decree the appeal has been preferred has disposed of the suit on a preliminary point and its decree has been reversed on appeal, a copy of these judgments shall be sent to the Court with directions to re-admit the appeal under its original number and determine it on the merits. Costs here and hitherto will abide the result. The costs in this Court will be on the higher scale.

Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.*

An order passed under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code refusing to interfere in Revision with an order of a Subordinate Judge passed under section 151 of the Code restoring to file a suit which had been disposed of upon an alleged compromise between the parties is not a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 of the Code and leave cannot, therefore, be granted to appeal to His Majesty in Council against such an order.

An order is a final one under section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties.

ORDER.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council against an order passed by us in C. R. P. No. 423 of 1922, in which we refused to interfere in revision with the order of a Subordinate Court restoring to file a suit which had been first disposed of upon an alleged compromise between the parties.

Before we can certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council, we must be satisfied that the order passed by us was a final order within the meaning of section 109, Civil Procedure Code. What is a "final order" has been defined in Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Vishandas Ratanchand (1). The Privy Council say that,—

"an order is a final one if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties."

JOHN JOSEPH BRITO v. MRS. S. S. BRITO

simha Bharati (2) where Shah, C. J., says that, "a final order is one which decides a cardinal point in the suit and finally disposes of the rights of the parties."

Crump, J., who sat with him, took the word "final" to mean

"an order which puts an end to the litigation between the parties, or at all events disposes so substantially of the matters in issue between them as to leave merely subordinate or ancillary matters for decision."

An English case, Croasidell & Cammell, Laird & Co., Ltd., In re: (3) has been quoted before us in which it was held that "an order passed by a Divisional Court setting aside an award made by an arbitrator was not a final order but an interlocutory one which involved no determination of the rights of the parties as regards the matters which were in dispute in the arbitration."

Applying those definitions to the case before us, let us see what is the result. The Court below restored the suit to file because it found as a result of an enquiry that the defendant caused the plaintiff to sign a compromise petition by fraud and undue influence. The matter came up to us because it was argued that the Subordinate Court had no power to make such an order under section 151, Civil Procedure Code. We refused to interfere on the ground that the lower Court could have made such an order in the exercise of its powers of Review and because the merits of the case would be finally enquired into at the trial which was to take place thereafter. Assuming that the lower Court's order refusing to act upon the compromise did in some way dispose of the rights of the parties, our order did not take away from or add anything to what the lower Court decided. We only decided the question of jurisdiction. The rights of the parties in the suit were left open for decision and have since been decided. We are, therefore, of opinion that our order was not a final order within the meaning of section 109, Civil Procedure Code.

It is argued that, if the petitioner is not given leave to appeal against our order, he will be precluded from raising the contention that the matter has been settled by compromise and making that a ground of appeal against the final decree, and, in that connection, reference has been made to section 105, which may also be read with section 97, Civil Procedure Code, as to the right of a party to raise an issue in appealing against a final decree which he has not appealed against in appeal from the preliminary decree.

The answer to that argument is found in Venkatarama Row v. Narasimha Rao (4) where it was pointed out by Miller and Sadasiva, Aiyar, JJ., that section 105 does not apply to appeals to His Majesty in Council and does not supply a guide to the interpretation of the word "final" in section 109. In Saratmani Debi v. Bala Krishna Banerjee (5), Mookerjee, J., defined a "final order" as "one which finally decides any matter which is directly at issue in the case in respect of the rights of the parties."

With due respect, we consider that this, as it stands, is a definition which cannot be quite reconciled with the definition in, Ramchand Manjimal v. Goverdhandas Vishandas Ratan Chand (1), Shankar Bharati v. Narasimha Bharati (2) but as the learned Judge goes on to say that "the answer to the question whether the order is final or not must depend on whether it decided finally the cardinal point in the suit or an issue which goes to the foundation of the suit"

there is no need to quarrel with his first definition Meghraj v. Bidyabati Koer (6) and Lachmi Narain Marwari v. Balamakund Marwari (7) are both cases in which an order was passed setting aside a decree dismissing a suit for default. It is unnecessary to canvass the correctness of the view that such an order might be a final order, because the orders there passed do not in any way correspond to the order which we passed on the Revision Petition in this suit. Assuming that the Subordinate Judge's order finally disposed of the rights of the parties to have their dispute settled by compromise and was thus a "final Appeal against the judgment and decree of the District Judge, Sukkur, dated the 2nd May 1922.

Mr. Srikishendas H. Lulla, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit filed by the plaintiff-appellant against the Secretary of State for India, defendant-respondent, for a declaration that his assessment to income tax in the sum of Rs. 3,125 for the year 1918-19 was illegal and for the recovery of this sum with interest and costs. The suit has been dismissed on a preliminary point, the District Judge of Sukkur holding it barred by section 52 of the Income Tax Act VII of 1918. Section 52 is as follows: "No suit shall be brought in any Civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made under this Act, and no prosecution, suit or other proceedings shall lie against any Government Officer for any thing done in good faith or intended to be done under this Act". The main point that arises on appeal is whether the assessment of the appellant to payment of income-tax was under the Act, for if it were not, a suit would undoubtedly lie.

The assessment is obviously based on classes of income that are not exempted by the Act.

The Income-tax authorities adjusted the income of the appellant for the year in question at Rs. 50,000 and a demand notice was issued to the appellant to pay income tax in the amount of Rs. 3,125. The appellant contends in the first instance that there has been an illegal assessment of interest on capital which has been taken to be recovered by the appellant from 18 different partnership concerns wherein he is interested. It is alleged that all these partnership concerns have paid income-tax at their respective places of business and the same income cannot be taxed twice; secondly, the amount shown as interest has not been received by the appellant in many cases and the total investment shown in these partnerships is inaccurate; thirdly, the interest shown as received from some of the partnerships has been included in some of the other items in the assessment order. It was next urged that the Income-tax authorities acted arbitrarily and illegally in determining the income to be Rs. 50,000 whereas it was actually Rs. 20,626, and, lastly, that the sum of Rs. 8,130 has not been taken into consideration as rebate in respect of bad debts. I have set forth in detail the objections to the assessment by the appellant, for even assuming there has been an error in the assessment, is the error one of such a character as to render the assessment one not under the Act? We have had an elaborate argument from Mr. Lulla on behalf of the appellant and his contentions may be substantially narrowed down to two points, first, that it is not income that has been taxed, second, that a part of his income has been taxed twice, consequently, the assessment is not under the Act and the Civil Courts are not ousted of their jurisdiction to determine the question whether the assessment is legal.

The Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, though wholly repealed by Act II of 1922, has reproduced the provisions of section 52 of the former Act in their entirety in the latter. In the present case it is the former Act that is applicable.

Section 18 of the Act of 1918 prescribes the procedure prior to the determination of the assessment of income-tax payable by the assessee. An Income-tax Collector is a Revenue Court: In re Poonamchand Maneklal (1), and if the assessee is aggrieved by his order either under sections 18 and 19 of the Act he has the right under certain limitations to petition the Commissioner for relief against any order of the Collector in respect of such assessment or adjustment (section 21). It is established that prior to the assessment the Collector gave the assessee an opportunity of appearing before him with any documentary evidence in his possession and after hearing him and examining such of the accounts-books as were produced, assessed the income-tax.

Assuming that the Collector has made an erroneous assessment, can it be said that the assessment was not under the Act so as to give the Civil Courts jurisdiction, for it cannot for a moment be denied that if the assessment was under the Act, the suit is unentertainable.

It is argued that income has been taxed which has not arisen or been received in British India, that appellant had some of his capital invested in Khairpur and Mysore States from which he has received no profits. By his order Ex. 30 the Collector stated as follows: "Moreover, he is a capitalist partner in 18 lucrative concerns (some of which are not taxed separately) the separate accounts (*khata*s) of which show he has received as much as Rs. 4,85,375 from them in 1918. The original accounts of these concerns have not been produced to show how much of this is business profit. Since all these necessary documents and account-books have not been produced there is no certainty that the personal profits and business profits are really as much as stated and no more; appellant has admittedly about 6 lakhs of rupees invested in different partnership concerns and income on 6 per cent. interest on this has been taxed. The Collector was not satisfied that the appellant had not received at least this amount of profit on his capital, and if there was an error, it was an error due to the appellant not having adduced satisfactory evidence to prove the contrary, but it is scarcely arguable that the assessment was not under the Income Tax Act. Similarly, it was for the appellant to satisfy the Collector that the income which had been taxed had been already taxed before and, therefore, could not be taxed twice. The Collector holds that necessary and essential books and documents have been withheld from him and a summary assessment based on the previous years' figures was justifiable. What the Collector, therefore, taxes is income which, in his honest opinion, has not been previously taxed and if the appellant was dissatisfied with the order of the Collector he had his right of appeal to the Commissioner. The appellant's unsupported statement that it is not income is not sufficient to regard the assessment as one not under the Income Tax Act.

It is not, as observed, an exempted class of income that has been taxed, the only question that could arise would be in the event of the partnerships having paid income-tax at their respect place of business the appellant could be again charged in respect of the same income under section 18 of the Act of 1918, but it was for appellant to prove that the income-tax had already been paid on these items of income.

It was argued that the assessment was arbitrary, no doubt it had to be an assessment on scanty materials but for this the appellant is responsible. The Collector finds that the (a) invoices from the commission agents, (b) noonkh book for speculative transactions, (c) the Kharra book for business, done in ready goods, were not produced before him by the appellant, and he, perforce, had to arrive at a figure on such materials as were before him taking into account the previous year's assessment.

In Saibesh Chandra Sarkar v. Bejoy Chand Mahato (2), it was observed that "it is an established principle that where by an Act of the Legislature powers are given to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive injury, if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Statute, the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted and in case of injury the party cannot proceed to action." There can be little doubt that the Income Tax Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy. In F. J. de Verteuil v. Cantonment Committee, Karachi, (3), "it was held that a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with or question the propriety of an order which has been passed by a duly constituted tribunal and which the legislature has declared to be final." This judgment no doubt dealt with the provisions of the Cantonment House Accommodation Act but the principle as to the jurisdiction of the Civil Court is in pari materia.

If the Collector of Income Tax, who has been constituted a special tribunal by the Income Tax Act, had assessed anything but income or had levied an assessment on the classes of income exempted by the Act, he would have over-stepped the limits of his jurisdiction his assessment would not have been under the Act. But in this case he professes to tax income and income only; there may be an error in his calculation, but his order is still one under the Act, and, if erroneous, it is capable of rectification on appeal. The Collector was exercising a jurisdiction vested in him under the Act and his assessment, under the circumstances shown above, was one under the Act.

In Forbes v. The Secretary of State for India (4) a suit was brought by the executor of an estate for a declaration that as executor he was not liable to pay income-tax in respect of any income of the estate and that the Collector in realizing the sums paid to him, acted without jurisdiction, and for a decree for the amount so paid with interest, it was held that the suit did not lie. There was no doubt in this case that the tax had been levied on income but the objection taken was that the executor was not liable to pay it. The High Court held that, as the Collector had determined that the plaintiff was the person chargeable and in doing so had acted within his jurisdiction, the suit was incompetent. If there was an error in assessment by the Collector then it was a mistake of fact and not of Law his action was in conformity with the Act and hence the assessment was under the Act.

The result is, therefore, that the suit is barred and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Under sections 72 and 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is one of the rights of a mortgagee in possession to settle land with tenants.

A mortgagee in possession, with all zemindari rights vested in him, has a right to settle bakasht lands with tenants during the continuance of the mortgage, and the persons with whom the settlement is made would, in any event, acquire non-occupancy rights in the land.

Appeals from a decision of the Offg. District Judge, Shahabad, dated the 5th September 1921, reversing the decision of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Sasaram, dated the 24th July 1920.

Mr. N. C. Sinha, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Tahir, Rai Tribhuban Nath Sahay and D. C. Varma, for the Respondents.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—These three appeals have been preferred by the principal defendants against the decision of the District Judge of Shahabad, dated the 5th September 1921 whereby he reversed the decrees of the Munsif of Sasaram, and decreed the plaintiffs' suits for possession of certain lands. The facts are shortly these: The plaintiff is admittedly the zemindar of the village. He holds 3 annas share pucca which is equivalent to 9-annas, 7-pies, 4 krants under a Collectorate partition in Mauza Neoras. On the 5th April 1904 the plaintiff executed a bharna-deed in respect of his interest in the village in favour of the predecessor-in-interest of pro forma defendants. The deed was executed to secure repayment of an advance of Rs. 2,641 made by the ancestor of the pro forma defendants to the plaintiff and the stipulation in the deed was that the mortgagee would remain in possession of the plaintiff's share in the village for the period from 1312 to 1319. A sum of Rs. 750 was fixed as the annual jama or rental payable by the mortgagee to the mortgagor out of which the mortgagee was to deduct a sum of Rs. 450 annually and to appropriate the same towards repayment of the sum advanced by him and the balance of Rs. 300 was to be paid yearly to the mortgagor. The plaintiff's case is that the lands in dispute in these three suits were the zirait lands of the proprietor; that at the time of the execution of the bharna-deed the plaintiffs were in possession of these lands and when the pro forma defendants came into possession of the village, they took possession of these lands as zirait lands; that during the Survey and Settlement proceedings, which came to an end sometime in November 1912, the pro forma defendants got the names of the principal defendants in each of these suits recorded as tenants of the lands in dispute. Tanazu was filed before the Survey authorities but the objection was disallowed and the principal defendants were recorded as occupancy tenants of the lands in dispute. The plaintiff's case was that there was no bona fide settlement in favour of the principal defendants and, as a matter of fact, the pro forma defendants themselves continued in possession of these lands and the names of the principal defendants were caused to be recorded with the object of retaining possession of these lands even after the expiry of the term of the bharna. They, therefore, prayed for a declaration that the lands were zirait lands of the plaintiff; that the pro forma defendants had no right to settle the lands with the principal defendants; that, as a matter of fact, no such settlement had been made and that the principal defendants were trespassers and they prayed for recovery of possession of these lands. The pro forma defendants did not enter appearance and the suit was contested by the tenant-defendants and their allegation was that the lands in dispute were their ancestral occupancy holdings. In paragraph 11 of the written statement these defendants alleged that the plaintiffs' allegations that the bharnadars had no right to settle the lands and that the defendants are not kashtkars of the disputed lands, were altogether wrong and false, that the disputed lands constituted the kasht of the defendant, and that the Survey entries were correct.

Before the Munsif, where the case came on for trial, the principal issues were Issues Nos. 4 and 5. Issue No. 4 was—Was the disputed land zirait of the plaintiff and was it in possession of defendants Nos. 3 to 7 and are the contesting defendants trespassers thereon?

Issue No. 5 was—Whether the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 had right to settle the bakasht land. The learned Munsif came to the conclusion that the lands were not the zirait lands of the plaintiffs. He held further that the lands were the occupancy holdings of the principal defendants. As regards Issue No. 5 he held that under the terms of the bharna-deed the pro forma defendants were entitled to settle the lands with the principal defendants and, relying on the case of Atal Chandra Rishi v. Lakhi Narayan Ghose (1), he held that even if the principal defendants were not the occupancy tenants of the land from before the alleged settlement by the pro forma defendants they had, in any event, acquired non-occupancy right under a settlement made by the pro forma defendants. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Against this decision the plaintiffs went on appeal before the learned District Judge and the learned Judge has reversed the decision of the Munsif and decreed the plaintiffs' suit for possession.

The learned Judge considered the two principal issues, viz., Nos. 4 and 5 stated above. As regards Issue No. 4 the learned Judge says that it is not necessary to come to any decision as to whether the lands are zirait lands of the plaintiffs or not. He refers to the fact that the plaintiffs are admittedly the zemindars and, relying upon the principle laid down in the case of Narsing Narayan Singh v. Dharam Thakur (2), he holds that it was not incumbent upon the appellants that they should prove the zirait character of these lands before they can succeed. He then refers to the entry in the Record of Rights which is in favour of the defendants and he says that the entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted by the evidence produced on behalf of the plaintiffs.

As regards Issue No. 5, the learned Judge holds that the deed of 5th April 1904 was a pure usufructuary mortgage and that the pro forma defendants did not acquire the rights of a tenure-holder and, therefore, could not settle tenants on the land beyond the term of the bharna-deed.

As regards the question whether the principal defendants were occupancy tenants of the land in dispute from before the execution of the bharna-deed, there is a finding of fact by the learned District Judge which cannot be upset in second appeal. One of the reasons given by him for holding that the presumption raised by the Record of Rights in favour of the defendants has been rebutted, namely, that there is nothing to show on what the Record of Rights is based, is no doubt wrong. The entry being in favour of the defendants it was not necessary for them to show on what it was based, but it was for the plaintiffs to prove that it was incorrect. Later on, however, the learned Judge refers to evidence produced by the plaintiffs and he is of opinion that this evidence rebuts the presumption raised by the Record of Rights. This is a finding of fact which is binding upon me in second appeal.

The only question left for decision is as to what was the effect of the settlement alleged to have been made by the pro forma defendants with the principal defendants. The learned Judge, on a construction of the bharna-deed, has come to the conclusion that the pro forma defendants had no right to settle the lands with the principal defendants. I am unable to agree with the learned Judge on this point. On referring to the deed itself it appears that all zemindari rights were given to the mortgagee. The deed provides that the mortgagee would remain in possession of the mortgaged property for the period from 1312 to 1319 and what was transferred to the mortgagee was all lands, i.e., dih, arable, waste, talkeeri and all seminlari rights appertaining to the same. The only reservation made in the deed was as regards cutting of certain trees and transplanting the same. The deed therefore is a deed by which all the zemindari rights of the mortgagors had been transferred to the mortgagee. One of the ordinary rights of a Zemindar is to settle lands with tenants and if, in the ordinary course of management of the mortgaged property, the pro forma defendants settled the lands with the tenant defendants, such settlement would be good in law and the settlement holders would, in any event, acquire a non-occupancy right in the land. This was the view taken by this Court in the case of Sheo Barat Singh v. Padarath Mahton (3). There also a usufructuary mortgage had been executed in favour of certain persons and the usufructuary mortgagees during the continuance of the mortgage settled lands with certain tenants. After expiry of the term of the mortgage the mortgagor brought a suit for possession against the settlement-holders and this Court held that the mortgagee was entitled to settle lands with tenants during the continuance of his mortgage. It was held that, under sections 72 and 76 of the Transfer of Property Act, it is one of the rights of the mortgagee to settle land with tenants. It has been pointed out by the learned Vakil for the respondent that in that case the land in dispute was found to be tenancy land, that is, land in possession of tenants before the mortgage was executed; whereas there is no such finding in the present case. To my mind this does not make any difference so far as the present case is concerned. The case of the plaintiffs that the lands were the sirait lands of the malik was found to be not true by the Munsif. The learned Judge on appeal does not consider this question and it is conceded that they cannot be proved to be sirait in the strict sense of the term. In that event, the lands at most would be bakasht lands and to my mind a mortgagee in possession, with all Zemindari rights vested in him, has a right to settle such bakasht lands with tenants during the continuance of the mortgage and the persons with whom the settlement is made would in any event acquire a non-occupancy right.

(2) 9 C. W. N. 144.

MAHADEO LAL v. SRI GOBIND LAL SAHU

It has next been contended by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the settlement of the land by the pro forma defendants amounted to an encumbrance and a mortgagee in possession has no right to create an encumbrance beyond the term of his mortgage and the mortgagor is entitled to take possession of the mortgaged property free from such encumbrance and reliance has been placed upon the decision of the learned Chief Justice and Jwala Prasad, J., in M. A. No. 90 of 1920—Mahadeo Prasad Sahu v. Gajadhar Prasad Sahu (4). That decision has no bearing on the facts of the present case. The decision in that case turned upon the construction of a compromise decree which clearly provided that the appellant in that case was entitled to take possession of certain properties free from encumbrance created by the respondent and their Lordships held that the settlement in that case amounted to an encumbrance. In the present case there is no reservation in the bharna deed such as was made in the compromise decree in that case, Mr. Tahir for the respondents further contends that the case made by the tenant defendants was that the lands in dispute formed their ancestral occupancy holding and that there was no allegation in the written statement that these defendants were in possession by virtue of a settlement from the pro forma defendants, and that the case made by them having filed, these defendants were not entitled to fall back upon a case of settlement from pro forma defendants not made by them in the written statement. It is true that no case of settlement was clearly made in the written statement, but, as I have already stated, they did make an allegation in paragraph 11 of the written statement that the pro forma defendants had a right to settle lands and an issue was distinctly raised on this point, and was considered by both the Courts below and it is too late now to say that no such case was made. It may be mentioned here that there is no finding in the judgments of either the Trial Court or of the Court of Appeal below that the settlement by the pro forma defendants was not a bona fide settlement. In fact, the point does not appear to have been pressed by the plaintiffs although an allegation to this effect was made in the plaint. In this view of the case the present action in ejectment treating the principal defendants as

Case-law discussed.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, date the 28th February 1922.

Mr. V. V. Chitale, for the Appellants.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following points are pressed for my consideration in this second appeal: (1) that the mortgagor defendant No. 1's mother Radha Bai was not his legal guardian and as she was a mere de facto guardian the mortgage was void and could not be ratified (grounds 1 and 3); (2) that the ratification, if any, after the transfer in favour of defendant No. 2, could not affect him or his successors in title the defendants Nos. 3 and 4 (ground No. 2); (3) that the transfer by way of mortgage was not justified by legal necessity, or by bona fide enquiry (grounds Nos. 4, 5 and 6).

Before proceeding to discuss these points, I should think a brief statement of a few relevant facts is necessary. One Babuji Patel of mouza Kharala died possessed of considerable property several years ago. Defendant No. 1 Bajirao is his son. He was then a minor. Radha Bai was his widow. Radha Bai, purporting to act as the guardian and manager of her minor son's estate, executed two mortgages (1) mortgage dated 3rd January 1896 Exhibit p-3, in favour of the predecessor in title of the present plaintiffs for a consideration of Rs. 600 in respect of fields Nos. 147, 159, 6 and 7 P and some other property of mouza Kharala; (2) mortgage dated 22nd April 1910, Exhibit D-5, in favour of defendant No. 2's husband's firm for Rs. 350 in respect of the said fields. Defendant No. 2's husband instituted suit No. 46 of 1913, Exhibit D-3, on the basis of his mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree for foreclosure in terms of the compromise on 12th November 1913, Exhibit D-3, and made it final on 15th September 1917, Exhibit D-2. Apparently mention of No. 137 in the decree is a mistake for No. 147. After this foreclosure, defendant No. 2 by a registered sale deed dated 9th March 1918, Exhibit D-6, transferred the property foreclosed to defendants Nos. 3 and 4. After attaining majority, defendant No. 1 executed two bonds dated 2nd February 1914, Exhibit P-2, and 20th November 1917, Exhibit P-1, in favour of Krishnaji the predecessor in title of the present plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4, wherein he has admitted liability under the mortgage deed in suit, Exhibit P-3. It is on this admission that the plea of ratification is based by the plaintiffs.

Defendant No. 1 pleaded that his mother Radha Bai was not his guardian at the date of the mortgage, Exhibit P-3; that, as a matter of fact, he lived in mouza Sherola with his cousin whereas his mother lived at Chandur. He also disputed the validity of the admission made by him in Exhibits P-1 and P-2 on the ground that unfair advantage was taken of his urgent need for the loan taken under the documents. Defendant No. 4 also contested the binding character of the mortgage on the ground that Radha Bai was not the guardian of the minor; that there was no legal necessity for the mortgage and, further, that the ratification, if any, by defendant No. 1 was not binding on him. Plaintiffs controverted the defendants Nos. 1 and 4's assertions and pleaded that Radha Bai was the proper guardian and could properly represent defendant No. 1, even if the latter lived with his cousin. The plaintiffs also justified the mortgage on the ground that it was a mortgage given by a de facto guardian and that the mortgagees acted after due and proper enquiry from the nearest relatives and were satisfied as to the existence of necessity for the loan. They also denied that the defendant No. 1 was forced to ratify the mortgage in suit.

The first Court found that the mortgagees advanced the loan to defendant No. 1 acting through his de facto guardian Radha Bai, after making due and proper enquiries, that it was open to defendant No. 1 to ratify the mortgage even after the passing of the preliminary decree dated 12th November 1923, Exhibit D-4, and that its effect was to validate the mortgage even if it be considered as made without legal necessity. In the result, the plaintiff got a preliminary decree for foreclosure against all the defendants.

Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 alone appealed to the District Judge, Amraoti, who upheld the findings of the lower Court. The defendants Nos. 3 and 4 have now come up in second appeal urging the points stated at the beginning of this judgment.

In view of the concurrent findings of fact on the questions of bona fide enquiry, existence of legal necessity, and ratification, which I consider are binding against me as the second Appellate Court, it is sufficient for me to say that the question of ratification is rendered immaterial as the mortgage is found to be one made by a de facto guardian for legal necessity. The finding as to bona fide enquiry and existence of legal necessity being based upon evidence proper for consideration by the lower Appellate Court is not liable to challenge. This disposes of points (2) and (3).

The only point which requires careful consideration is, whether Radha Bai was only a de facto guardian or a de jure guardian of her minor son Bajirao at the date of the mortgage and whether, in view of the ruling of this Court in Husen v. Rajaram (1), the alienation made by Radha Bai is void if her position is that of a mere de facto guardian, and whether, in view of the ruling in Kolhu v. Belsingh (2), she is not the natural or legal guardian of Bajirao. The decision of these questions has been rendered somewhat difficult by reason of the said two decisions of this Court. Reliance is placed by the appellants particularly on the passage at page 192 of Kolhu v. Belsingh (2) and it is contended that, in a case governed by Hindu Law, the mother becomes the guardian of the person of her infant child after the death of the father, but his property would still remain under the management of the Karta of the joint family of which he was a member.

With due respect to the view of my learned colleague who decided the case of Kolhu v. Belsingh (2), I am constrained to say that there is no support in Hindu Law for the proposition that a Hindu mother is not the legal guardian of the property of her minor son, after the father. On the contrary, there is overwhelming authority in support of the proposition that under Hindu Law after the father the mother is the natural and legal guardian of her minor son's person and property, in a family where, as in this case, a minor son is the sole owner of the property and there are no other undivided co-parceners entitled to a share therein.

The case of Husen v. Rajaram (1), was a case of an alienation by a step-mother and not by the mother of the minor, although the two widows of the minor's father lived together the elder widow, that is, the step-mother of the minor was managing the property and the family affairs. On the strength of the Privy Council ruling in Matadin v. Sheikh Ahmad Ali, (3) which was a case of Mahomedan brothers alienating property in which their minor brother was interested along with them, and, therefore, inapplicable to a case under Hindu Law, as pointed out in a subsequent decision of this Court by Stanyon, A. J. C., in Somwarpuri v. Gopalsingh (4) it was held that the alienation was by the minor's guardian de facto and not le jure, and that it was not merely voidable but absolutely void, and that the minor need not sue to have it set aside before he could obtain possession of the property. In my opinion the ruling in Husen v. Rajaram, (1) is, therefore, no authority for the view that the mother is not the natural guardian of the minor or that the alienation made by her is void. On the contrary, that case gives strong indication that Hallifax, A. J. C., regarded the case of an alienation by a mother of a minor on a different footing from that of an alienation by a step-mother, as we find from the distinction made by him at page 136 of the report between that case and the two earlier cases of this Court, Sestaram Sadasheo v. Nilu Patel (5), and Mt. Tanto v. Gajadhar (6), which were cases of alienations made "by the mother of the minor who was his guardian de jure and also de facto." Having thus distinguished the earlier cases on this important point he held that the alienation in question in the case before him was void on the ground that it was effected by a de facto or unauthorised guardian.

In the case of Kolhu v. Belsingh (2), the question was whether the alienation by one Warlu, the elder brother of the minor plaintiffs, during their minority was void on the ground that it was not an alienation by the mother who, according to the plaintiffs, was the natural guardian of their person and property. It was a case of Raja Gonds. It could not necessarily be accepted as settled law as regards Gonds that they were governed by Hindu Law. It has since been held by a Bench of this Court in Vithoba v. Lal Singh (7), that a Gond is not a Hindu and is not governed by the Hindu Law, so that the onus of proving that any particular Gond family or any large body of Gonds in which the party is included has accepted Hindu Law and is governed by it rests on the party alleging it. . . . The question whether the mother was the natural guardian of the minor or whether his elder brother was his guardian for the purposes of alienating the property of the minor could not, therefore, be necessarily decided with reference to Hindu Law, in the case of Gonds unless it was proved that the particular Gond family was governed by Hindu Law.

"It has been held by this Court in the case mentioned, which is Mt. Ujijara v. Tilochan Gond (8), that a Gond is not a Hindu and the onus of proving that a Gond family has adopted the Hindu law and is governed by it rests on the party alleging it. The matter is by no means free from doubt and the question is raised in the petition of appeal here. It appears, however, that in the pleadings in the first Court it was admitted by both parties that, except in a few matters with which we are not now concerned, the plaintiffs are not governed by the Hindu Law, and the position now taken by the appellants was abandoned. The view, therefore, that in the absence of proof of any special custom the question of guardianship must in this case be decided according to justice, equity and good conscience is perfectly sound. Where the learned District Judge has erred is in the assumption that, 'according to justice and equity and according to all systems of jurisprudence', the mother is the natural guardian after the father, being led into the error by not having a very clear distinction in his mind between a guardian for the property and a guardian of the person. We are here concerned with a guardian for the property only, and in neither of the two main systems of personal law with which we have to deal most frequently in India does the mother of a minor become his guardian in respect of his property next after his father. In Hindu Law the mother becomes the guardian of the person of her infant child after the death of the father, but his property would still remain under the management of the Karta of the joint family of which he was a member if he were a Hindu."

The above quotation will show that the question whether under Hindu Law the natural mother of a minor was his lawful or legal guardian, and whether an alienation by her of property which belonged solely to a minor and not to a joint family consisting of the minor and other undivided co-parceners, was void, or voidable, was neither involved in the case nor was any decision of that question necessary for the disposal thereof.

(8) 44 Ind. Cas. 435.

GANPAT SAMBAJI v. MAHADEO

Treating that case as a case of a Goud family proved to be governed by Hindu Law (which, however, was not the case there), the view that a mother of a minor son does not, next after the father, become his guardian in respect of his property, i. e., of property in which he alone is interested, is one which, with due respect for my colleague, I must say is not supported by Hindu Law.

Mr. Mayne in his valuable treatise on Hindu Law and Usage, 9th Edition, at page 283, states the summary of the Law on the point as follows :—

"The Hindu Law vests the guardianship of the minor in the sovereign as parens patrie. Necessarily, this duty is delegated to the child's relations. Of these the father, and next to him the mother, is his natural guardian, any other relative must derive his authority from the Courts. . . . Of course, in an undivided family governed by Mitakshara Law, the management of the whole property, including the minor's share, would be vested not in the mother, but in the eldest son. It would be otherwise where the family was divided."

Trevelyan's Law relating to Minors, 5th Edition, page 49, contains the following statement of the law on the point :—

"The Hindu Law does not seem to prescribe any positive rules with respect to the right of guardianship; but by practice and custom the right of certain relations of a Hindu minor have now almost acquired the force of law. . . . For instance, the rights of the father, and of the mother after the death of the father, have been so long and universally acknowledged as to be now indisputable."

At page 50 the following statement appears :—

"On the death of the father, or in his absence or in case of his having lost the right of guardianship, and in the absence of a valid appointment by him, the natural or adoptive mother, as the case may be, is entitled to the guardianship of her minor children If the minor is a member of a joint Hindu family, the Karta of the family would be entitled to the management of the joint property; but if the family be a divided one, the mother is, failing the father, entitled to custody of the minor's property; and even if the family were joint, she would apparently be so entitled, so far as the minor's separate property, if any, is concerned, where the mother is manager of her minor child's property, her position necessarily requires her to seek the advice of her husband's relations, and she would often strengthen her position by her so doing, but the law cannot compel her to seek, or to act under their advice, if she wishes to take the whole responsibility upon herself."

Similarly, Trevelyan on Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, at pages 214 and 215, we find the above statement of law re-produced practically verbatim and supported by citations from several authoritative decisions.

Dr. Gour in his Hindu Code, 2nd Edition, mentions "the mother," in section 59 at page 428, as "the natural guardian of the person and property of the minor" next to "the father."

In Watson and Company v. Sham Lal Mitter (9), their Lordships of the Privy Council accepted the position of the mother of a minor Hindu as that of a lawful and natural guardian of the minor and raised the presumption that in executing the kabuliyats in respect of the estate of her minor son under her management, she executed them as his natural guardian, that is, she acted in "her lawful capacity as guardian of her minor son" and not in her own capacity adversely to her son. There are numerous authorities quoted in several other works on Hindu Law by eminent authors where the position of the mother as the guardian and manager of her minor son's property has been affirmed in the clearest of terms. I may simply quote the local case of Vithu v. Devadas (10) where the observations of Sadasiva Ayyar, J., in the case of Thayammal v. Knpanna Koundan (11), were quoted with approval by Mittra, A. J. C., in support of the position of a Hindu minor.

Under these circumstances, the contention urged by the appellants that the mortgage in suit was void on the ground that Mt. Radha Bai, the mother of the minor Bajirao, was only a de facto guardian and not de jure guardian cannot be upheld. The Courts below have also held that the mortgage was justified by legal necessity and was taken by the mortgagees after bona fide enquiry. The appellants can, therefore, succeed in no case. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs. The costs in the Courts below will be paid as ordered.

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—The plaintiffs bring this suit under section 92 of the Code of Civil Procedure against Seven defendants and pray for the removal of the defendants from management, for the appointment of new trustees, for an account from the defendants and for the settlement of a scheme. In the plaint it is stated that defendants Nos. 6 and 7 are the "present trustees" of the plaint temple and defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are the Nattamaikars who are entrusted with collecting money due to the temple; and, although defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are not specifically described in the plaint as trustees, it is clear from the language of the plaint that the allegation is that they have been in management of the trust and should be removed on account of their misappropriation of the temple funds.

When the case came on for trial, the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 agreed upon a schedule which was approved of by the Court, but defendants Nos. 1 to 5 were ex parte at this hearing. A preliminary decree was, therefore, drawn up settling the scheme and ordering a Commissioner to examine the accounts in order to find out which of the defendants were liable to make good monies to the temple. In accordance with this decree, the Commissioner proceeded to examine the accounts and to take evidence and, as a result of his enquiry, he sent in a report to which objections were taken by the defendants. After hearing those objections, the learned Subordinate Judge has found that defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have to make good a sum of Rs. 338; that the 1st defendant has to account for Rs. 2,774-8-2, and that the 7th defendant is also liable for another sum of Rs. 60.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 appeal against the preliminary decree in Appeal No. 85 of 1941 and the 1st defendant alone appeals against the final decree in Appeal No. 118 of 1922. The first objection that is taken in appeal is, that this suit, under section 92 Civil Procedure Code, will not lie against the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 as they are not trustees but mere alienees of the trust property. It has been held that no relief can be granted against alienees of trust property in a suit under section 92, vide Kasturi Venkataramana Aiyengar v. Kasturi Ranga Aiyengar (1), Asam Raghavalu Shetty v. Pellati Sittamma (2) and Rangayya Naidu v. Chinnasamy Iyer (3) and if the 1st defendant, to whose case the argument is almost entirely addressed is a mere alienee, it is clear that no relief can be granted against him in this suit. It is, however, contended for the plaintiffs that the 1st defendant is not a mere alienee but a trustee de son tort and it is well settled that a suit under section 92 will lie against such a person, for he is in effect a trustee de facto, though not de jure. I may refer to Jugalkishore v. Lakshmandas (4), Budree Das Mukin v. Chooni Lal Johurry (5), Ram Bilas v. Nitya Nand (6) and Siddan Lal v. Gauri Shankar (7).

It is argued that the Subordinate Judge, when directing an account to be taken, did not find that the 1st defendant was a trustee de son tort and that apparently is correct, for no finding is recorded and admittedly no evidence on the point was taken; but the Commissioner was ordered to enquire as to which defendant was liable and although the Subordinate Judge seems to have taken it for granted that the 1st defendant would be liable, he did not definitely consider the point, probably because, defendants Nos. 1 to 5, being ex parte, the question was not argued before him. When evidence was taken by the Commissioner, two witnesses were examined on behalf of defendants Nos. 6 and 7 who were not at all cross-examined, and their evidence shows clearly that the 1st defendant was actually collecting money for the temple and was, in effect, managing all the affairs of the temple. There is no counter-evidence and, consequently, I think we must accept the statements of those witnesses and find that the 1st defendant was a trustee de son tort.

A request is made that the case should be sent down for further enquiry; but, inasmuch as defendants Nos. 1 to 5 have been grossly negligent in conducting their defence, I do not think it is right that they should be given any further opportunity of prolonging this litigation on the chance that they may be able to establish their innocence. The lower Court has, in effect, found that the 1st defendant as a trustee is liable to refund large sums of money and, on the evidence before the Commissioner, this finding is obviously correct.

It is alleged that the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have colluded together in order to defraud the 1st defendant. No doubt, they did come to an agreement in the case and it is the witnesses examined on behalf of defendants Nos. 6 and 7 who prove the management by the 1st defendant and his receipt of the temple funds. It is possible that, in the absence of defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 6 and 7 have made up their differences and have joined in imputing liability to the first defendant; but in the proceedings before the Commissioner the 1st defendant had ample opportunity to put forward his own case and not only was he ex parte when the preliminary decree was passed but he declined to adduce any evidence before the Commissioner and did not even cross-examine the witnesses that were examined. There is, therefore, no ground for delaying the proceedings by allowing any further enquiry to be held.

It is then urged that the Commissioner's account is altogether wrong and does not represent the true state of affairs. A similar objection was taken before the Subordinate Judge but, as he points out, the objections taken were hazy and the 1st defendant made silly allegations against the Commissioner. The 6th and 7th defendants raised objections which were in part allowed and now the 1st defendant again raises his objections which I think may well be described again as hazy. No real attempt has been made to show in what respect the accounts are wrong. Certain portions of the account have been placed before us, but from the data afforded by these papers it is impossible to say that the Commissioner is wrong. It is not suggested that he has deliberately misstated the accounts, and his account was accepted by the lower Court. I see no grounds now for holding that the Commissioner's report is not strictly accurate. In this view, the 1st defendant's appeal would have to be dismissed.

The only point remaining for consideration is, whether defendants Nos. 6 and 7 should not be made jointly liable with the 1st defendant. This plea was not specifically taken in the memorandum of appeal by 1st defendant and it would perhaps be hard on defendants Nos. 6 and 7 to make them liable without giving them an opportunity of putting forward an answer. It is clear from the Commissioner's report that it was the 1st defendant alone who actually received the money which has been misappropriated and, therefore, he has rightly been made liable and his liability is certainly the preliminary liability. Nevertheless, defendants Nos. 6 and 7 are trustees and as such responsible for the proper administration of the trust property and are no doubt second-arily liable. I would, therefore, modify the decree by declaring that the 1st defendant is liable for the amount specified therein and that, failing recovery from him, defendants Nos. 6 and 7 will have to make good the deficiency.

No objections are taken in appeal to the scheme that has been framed and, consequently, subject to the above modification, both these appeals must be dismissed with costs of plaintiffs.

As regards the memorandum of objections, I am not prepared to interfere with the lower Court's discretion and, therefore, dismiss it.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—It is conceded that the decree against the 1st defendant could be justified only on the footing that he was a trustee de son tort. The allegations in this respect in the plaint, such as they are, have been denied not only in the written statement of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 but also by the 6th and 7th defendants. Even should issue 9 "Whether defendants Nos. 1 to 5 are necessary parties to the suit" be deemed to cover this question, there has been no trial of that issue and no finding has been recorded. The truth is, that in the lower Court the case was not looked at from this point of view at all and the Commissioner was directed to take an account on the assumption that a suit under section 92 would lie against strangers. It was not within his province to adjudicate upon the liability of the 1st defendant a question that should have been tried by the Court before the Commissioner was appointed. Even when evidence was adduced before the Commissioner, it was directed to prove not that the 1st defendant was liable but to prove the measure of his liability and this circumstance is amply borne out by the fact that witnesses were examined only by defendants Nos. 6 and 7 who had previously denied that the 1st defendant was a trustee. My inclination is, therefore, to direct further inquiry, but as my learned brother takes a different view and as the nonchalant manner in which the 1st defendant conducted his case before the lower Court makes me very sceptical as to his ultimate success, whereas a further enquiry will certainly entail more expense, I do not desire to dissent from my learned brother's conclusion and I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by him.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss. 5, 12.—Application for leave to appeal to Privy Council.—Time spent in obtaining copy of judgment, whether extended.—“Sufficient cause,” interpretation of.—Time, when can be extended.

The time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment can be extended in addition to the time for obtaining a copy of the decree only in cases where the decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed. In an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, it is only the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree that can be excluded in computing the period of limitation. [p. 953, col. 2]

The words “sufficient cause” in section 5 of the Limitation Act must no doubt receive a liberal construction, but when once the time for appeal has passed, a valuable right is secured to a successful litigant of which he must not be deprived unless the Court is satisfied that justice requires that extension of time should be granted and it must further be shown that there has been no inaction or negligence on the part of the petitioner. [p. 954, col. 2]

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, for the Applicants.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. A preliminary objection has been taken to the application being time-barred.

Article 179, Indian Limitation Act of 1908, as amended by Act XXV of 1920, reduces the period of limitation from six months to ninety days to be computed from the date of the decree appealed from.

I C—120

The decree is dated the 26th January 1922, the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council was made on the 13th May 1922, that is to say, 107 days after the date of the decree. Prima facie, therefore, the application is time barred unless the applicant satisfies the Court that, in computing the period of limitation, he is entitled to the exclusion of any time.

Mr. Elphinston who represents the applicant urges that the period occupied in granting him a copy of the judgment against which he seeks leave to appeal should be excluded under section 12, Indian Limitation Act. His argument is that the application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council would not be validly presented unless it were accompanied by a copy of the judgment and decree appealed against and that both the Rules of this Court as well as its practice require that a copy of the judgment should be attached to the application for leave to appeal. He also argues that a copy of the judgment is indispensable to enable the Court to which the application is presented to determine whether it should be granted or refused.

Clause (2) to section (12) Indian Limitation Act is as follows: “In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, for leave to appeal and an application for review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded.”

Clause (3) of the same section reads: “Where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded.”

The words used in both these clauses are perfectly plain and unambiguous, and the use of the word “also” in clause (3) clearly manifests the intention of the Legislature that the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment can be excluded in addition to the time for obtaining a copy of the decree, only in cases where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed. Therefore, in an application for leave to appeal the Law permits exclusion only of the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the decree. Whatever be the intention of the Legislature in establishing the distinction, there is no doubt that the distinction exists and it is not open to us to circumvent it or nullify the effect of the section. The applicability of section 12 of the Limitation Act to the present case is not questioned and hence, in terms of the section, it is only the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree that can be excluded in computing the period of limitation.

Nor do the rules of this Court insist upon a copy of the judgment being annexed to the petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Rule 7 of the rules of the Court, at p. 147, refers to Civil miscellaneous appeals and applications which require copies of the judgment to be attached, but an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council is not to be classified as a civil miscellaneous application. Equally, rule 1 under the heading of Privy Council appeals, at p. 157, to which reference was made in argument, merely states that every petition under section 598, Civil Procedure Code shall be in the form prescribed by the Code for appeals, and this, obviously, refers to its being in the form of a memorandum signed by the appellant or his pleader and presented to the Court or such officer as it appoints in this behalf.

I may further observe from inquiries made from the Registrar of this Court that, though it is usual to attach a copy of the judgment appealed from in an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, yet it has never been insisted upon to secure a due presentation of the application and the application would be deemed proper if only a copy of the decree accompanied it. Hence, neither the rules of this Court nor the practice require that a copy of the judgment is an essential adjunct to a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council.

Mr. Elphinstone strongly relied on Mahabir Prasad Tewari v. Jomina Singh (1), where it was held that, in computing the period of limitation prescribed by Art. 179 of the Limitation Act for an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment sought to be appealed from should be excluded under section 12 (3). It was observed in the judgment in this case that, "under the practice in this Court it is necessary that a copy of the judgment from which it is sought to appeal should always be filed with the petition applying for leave. The Court insists upon that because in some cases it is absolutely necessary that the judgment itself should be considered, notably in cases where the question is whether a substantial question of law arises for consideration." Inasmuch as the practice of the Patna Court has been to insist on a copy of the judgment being attached to the petition it is but a logical deduction to exclude the time occupied in obtaining it but, as I have observed, it is not the practice of our Court to insist upon a copy of the judgment, and, consequently, the principle on which the Patna High Court proceeded, (whether the practice is in conformity with the Law or not, I venture no opinion), cannot find place in our Court.

It appears to me that we must interpret the law as it stands, particularly as it is free from all ambiguity and when the Legislature clearly declares that only a copy of the decree is essential in a petition for leave to appeal consequently the time occupied in obtaining a copy of the judgment cannot be excluded. Mr. Elphinstone pressed us to apply the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act in his favour. His main argument for invoking the aid of this section was that some of the applicants were minors and the Court, therefore, ought to treat them in a generous spirit. Section 5, no doubt, vests the Court with a discretion which, however, must be judicially exercised. It is true that the words "sufficient cause" in the section must receive a liberal construction, but, at the same time, it must not be overlooked that when once the time for appeal has passed, a valuable right is secured to the successful litigant, of which he must not be deprived unless the Court is satisfied that justice requires that an extension of time should be granted. But, further, to attract the applicability of section 5 it must be shown that there has been no inaction or negligence on the part of the petitioner. The judgment, as I have observed, was delivered on the 26th January 1922 and the applicant had time till the 25th April 1922 to file his application. Assuming the correctness of his statement that though he applied for a copy of the judgment on the 28th January 1922 it was ready for delivery only on the 20th February 1922. The petitioner had full two months to file his application. It was urged that, as the estate of Gulam Mahomed was under the management of the Court of Wards, it was necessary to send the copy of the judgment to the Manager and it was not returned till a short time before the application was filed. This is certainly not an adequate reason for condoning the delay. The mother of the minors was their guardian ad litem and she was assisted in this litigation by the brother of her deceased husband who lived in the same house. Both in the District Court of Hyderabad and in this Court they had the advice of competent legal advisers. It did not require a period of two months either for the Manager of the Court of Wards or for the widow of Gulam Mahomed, who herself was also personally interested in the litigation, to make up their minds whether they should apply for leave to appeal to the Privy Council. To apply the provisions of section 5 of the limitation under these circumstances would be an injudicious exercise of our discretion.

We, therefore, hold that the application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is time barred and we reject it with cost.

Landlord and tenant—Ejectment, suit for—Tenancy, proof of—Mortgage-deed, unregistered, whether can be relied upon to show nature of possession—Registration Act (XVI of 1908) ss. 17, 49.

Where, in a suit for ejectment, the plaintiff comes into Court on the allegation that the defendant is a tenant, it is open to the latter to rely on an unregistered deed of mortgage which was followed by delivery of possession, in order to show the nature of his possession and to satisfy the Court that he is not holding the land as a tenant.

Thakore Fatesingji v. Bomanji A. Dalvi, 27 Bom. 515, relied on.

Second appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge of Cawnpore, dated the 7th February 1922.

Mr. M. S. Bajpai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, for Mr. Beni Bahadur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court. The defendant pleaded that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties. He in fact set up his rights as a mortgagee from the proprietor Ganesh, who is now dead, and one of whose sons is in Jail and the other absconding. He in support of his contention produced an unregistered deed dated the 22nd of April 1909.

The Court of first instance found that the relation of landlord and tenant did not exist between the parties. It also remarked that in this village the lambaradar was not the sole person who made collections, but that all the co-sharers made collections in respect of their separate shares. The first Court, therefore, was further of opinion that the suit by the lambaradar alone for ejectment was not maintainable.

On appeal the lower Appellate Court has upheld the findings of the first Court and dismissed the suit. The judgment is not as clear as it might have been but I take it that the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the relation of landlord and tenant did not subsist between the parties.

It is true that the mortgage-deed in question, not being a registered document, is invalid as a mortgage-deed and cannot affect the property purporting to have been transferred under it. At the same time, this was executed in 1909 and delivery of possession followed. When the plaintiff came to Court on the allegation that the defendant was a tenant, I think it was open to the defendant to produce this document in order to show the nature of his possession and to satisfy the Court that he was not holding the land as a tenant. This is the view which was accepted in the Full

NILKANTH v. KESHEORAO

Bench case of the Madras High Court reported in Kurri Veerareddi v. Kurri Bapureddi (1) and by the Bombay High Court in the case of Thakore Fatesingji v. Bomani A. Dalal (2). It is also clear that if a suit had been brought in the Civil Court for the ejectment of the defendant as a trespasser he would have been allowed to show that he had been put in possession on payment of a certain mortgage-money and might have asked the Court to give him some relief in equity. Similarly, there may be a case where a co-owner has transferred his share under an unregistered sale-deed to his other co-owners and put them in possession. Even though the other co-owners cannot set up this unregistered deed as passing title, I think it is open to them to show by means of that deed that since that date they have been holding possession adversely to the original owner and not as mere co-owners. In this view of the matter, I am of opinion that it was open to the defendant to show that his possession was not that of a tenant, and that, whatever else his possession may be, the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist between the parties. This I take to be the finding of both the Courts below. On that finding the suit for ejectment in the Revenue Court was liable to be dismissed.

It is to be noted that the present plaintiff, though a lambardar, is in no sense the legal representative of Ganesh or his sons. A suit by him either for redemption of the supposed mortgage or for the ejectment of the defendant as a trespasser would not have been maintainable in the Civil Court. It is, therefore, not open to him to turn round and treat the defendant as a tenant, when on the facts found by the Courts below the defendant has not been holding this land as a tenant at all.

I am, therefore, unable to interfere with the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court and I dismiss this appeal with costs.

NILKANTH—APPELLANT

RESPONDENTS.

Stamp Act II of 1899 ss. 26, 85, Sch. I, Arts. 5 (c), 57 (b)—Agreement of service and security-bond without limit, duty payable on—Deficiency—Procedure—Penalty, whether can be recovered.

Where no limit is defined in a security-bond or the limit is exceeded, the instrument falls under clause (b) of Article 57 of Schedule I to the Stamp Act and a fixed duty is payable thereon. Section 26 of the Stamp Act, which must be read subject to section 35 of the Act, has no application to such an instrument.

Mulji Bechar v. Jetha Jeshankar, 10 Bom. 239; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 517; Kondaji Seshayya v. Grouchi Venkata Subbayya Chetty, 33 Ind. Cas. 448; 31 M. L. J. 234, relied on.

A combination of an agreement of service and a security-bond in which no limit is defined falls under Articles 5 (c) and 57 (b) of Schedule I to the Stamp Act, and if the stamp paid on such an instrument is not sufficient the deficiency can be made up under section 35 of the Act. Section 26 of the Act has no application to such an instrument.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, dated the 30th April 1912.

Messrs. D. R. Dixit and R. B. D. N. Khare, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. R. Indurkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant No. 1. Motisao who is not a party to this appeal was in the service of the respondent as a warkari. The defendant No. 2, who is appellant before me, was a surety for him. Both of them have executed what is known as "Nokarnama" dated 20th November 1910, Exhibit P. 1. The aforesaid Motisao misappropriated large sums of money amounting to Rs. 1,399-2-0 belonging to the plaintiffs firm. The defendant No. 2 contested his liability on several grounds, one of them being that the secu-urity-bond was not admissible in evidence for want of proper stamp-duty. The plaintiffs admit that the defendant No. 2 agreed to stand surety for an unlimited amount, and submit that if the stamp-duty of Rs. 3 was insufficient the deficiency may be recovered from them and the document validated. The following issue is material to the points raised in this second appeal:—

"Whether the agreement "Nokarnama" and security bond is not properly stamped?"

The finding on this issue is that the document which was engrossed on a stamp worth Rs. 3 was executed under the impression that the funds in the hands of Motisao would never exceed the amount covered by the stamp, and had it been intended to cover an unlimited liability it would have been scribed on a five rupees stamp. That since the plaintiffs claim an unlimited liability thereunder, the finding of the Court was that it was not duly stamped. The plaintiffs' suit as against defendant No. 2 was, therefore, dismissed and a decree for Rs. 1,269 was passed against defendant No. 1. Plaintiffs' appeal against this decision was successful and defendant No. 2 was also made liable along with defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,269 and proportionate costs. The only point, therefore, pressed before me is whether under this "Nokarnama" and "security-bond" the plaintiffs can recover anything more than what is covered by the stamp-duty paid on the document. It is argued that, whereas the instrument does not mention the limit of the pecuniary liability, nothing more than what is covered by the stamp paid on it can be legally recoverable thereunder. The rulings reported in Mc Dowell v. Bagava Chetty (1), Collector of Tanjore v. Ramasamier (2), and In the Matter of Gajraj Singh (3), have been brought to my notice. It is urged that the cases in Mc Dowell v. Bagava Chetty (1), and In the Matter of Gajraj Singh (3), are distinguishable as the documents therein involved did contain a statement of the consideration and of all other facts affecting the chargeability of the instrument with duty as required by section 27 of the Stamp Act to enable the Court to determine or define the extent of the liability of the excutant thereunder and determine the stamp-duty payable. On the strength of the ruling Collector of Tanjore v. Ramasamier (2), it is contended that the liability being unlimited the document Exhibit P-1 does not entitle plaintiffs to recover more than Rs. 600 if it be treated as a bond under Article 15 of the Stamp Act. On the other hand, it is contended by the plaintiffs-respondents that the present case does not fall within the scope of section 26, Indian Stamp Act, because the instrument is not chargeable with ad valorem stamp-duty.

It is next contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that this document is a combination of an agreement of service and also of a security-bond within the meaning of Articles 5, clause (c), and 57, clause (b), of the Indian Stamp Act. The total stamp-duty payable in respect of the instrument was, therefore, 8 annas plus Rs. 5 but, as a matter of fact, the document was written upon a stamp-paper worth Rs. 3 and that it may be admitted in evidence on payment of duty and penalty. It is pointed out that section 26 of the Indian Stamp Act is subject to section 35 of the Indian Stamp Act. This is clearly established by the rulings in Mulji Bechar v. Jelhu Jeshankar (4), and Kondapi Sashayya v. Grandhi Venkata Subbayya Chetty (5). I am not prepared to hold that in this case the "Nokarnama" and "security-bond" taken together can be said to be wholly an instrument in respect of which ad valorem duty is payable. It is outside the scope of section 26 of the Stamp Act. There are several documents in respect of which fixed duty is prescribed and others where ad valorem duty is payable only up to a certain extent. Where, therefore, the limit is not defined or is exceeded, the instrument falls under the clause "in any other case" and fixed duty is payable thereon. Under these circumstances, I think the document in question is one which falls under Articles Nos. 5, clause (c), and 57, clause (b), of the Schedule and that the stamp-duty payable was 0-8-0 + Rs. 5 = Rs. 5-8. There is a deficiency of Rs. 2-8-0. This, together with the penalty Rs. 25 should be recovered from the respondents.

SATISH CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE v. SRI JOGUNNESSA BIBI

As the document has already been admitted into evidence, acting under section 61 of Indian Stamp Act, I direct the recovery of the amount of deficient stamp-duty, and penalty from the respondents. Until payment of stamp-duty and penalty the decree passed in the case shall not be confirmed in this Court. The respondents are called upon to furnish the necessary stamp-duty and penalty and then a decree dismissing the appeal and confirming the decree of the lower Appellate Court shall issue and the appeal will stand dismissed with costs. If the plaintiffs-respondents fail to make good the deficiency and the penalty by the 30th of this month, the appeal will be allowed and the decree will be modified by deleting the name of defendant No. 2 from the same and in that event the respondents will pay the defendant No. 2's costs of this appeal and of the lower Courts.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115 (c), O. XXII, rr. 3, 9 (2)—Abatement—Substitution made after time without objection—Opportunity, if to be given to set aside abatement—Section 115 (c), "Acting illegally," meaning of.

Where, during the pending of an application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, the applicant having died, and his heirs were not substituted till after the expiry of time allowed by law without any objection from the opposite party and or on appeal the District Judge held that the substitution was incompetent by reason of abatement having taken place under O. XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, which abatement was not set aside in accordance with O. XXII, r. 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code :

Held, that the order of the District Judge was right in law but that, by reason of the application for substitution having been readily allowed and no objection having been taken at any stage of the proceeding, the order of the District Judge unjustly deprived the petitioner of an opportunity to make an application under O. XXII, r. 9 (2) and had left him altogether without any remedy [p. 959, col. 1].

The expression "acting illegally" in section 115 (c) does not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as "acting with material irregularity" does. This part of the clause was advisedly left open in indefinite language in order to empower the High Court to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts, the justification for the interference being determined upon the grossness and palpableness of the error complained of and upon the gravity of injustice resulting from it [p. 959, col. 2].

Rule against the order of the District Judge of Tipperah in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 86 of 1922 against the decision of the Munsif, 6th Court, Comilla in Miscellaneous Suit No. 353 of 1920.

Mr. Mahomed Nurul Huq Chowdhury, for the Petitioner.

Babu Nagendra Chandra Chowdhury, for the Opposite Party.

Mukerji, J.—The facts which have given rise to the present application are these.

One Umedali applied under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, in the Court of the 6th Munsif at Comilla for setting aside a sale, and during the pendency of the said proceedings died on the 18th July 1920. On the 24th July 1920 the death was reported to the Court, and the learned Munsif made a note of it in the order-sheet. Thereafter, on five different dates, the proceedings were adjourned on the ground that the heirs had not been made parties and six months had not yet elapsed from the date of death. On the 5th February 1921, one of the dates to which the case was adjourned, an application for substitution was made on behalf of the heirs and legal representatives of Umedali and the same was allowed. It does not appear whether the opposite party were present on that date or not, but on none of the dates to which the case was subsequently adjourned, was any objection taken to the order for substitution that had been made, and the proceedings went on with the result that the learned Munsif set aside the sale by an order passed on the 18th February 1922. The opposite party preferred an appeal to the District Judge of Tipperah and the learned District Judge set aside the Munsif's order and dismissed the application for setting aside the sale, on the ground that the application had, as a matter of fact, abated by reason of the death of Umelali and the application for substitution was incompetent and the substitution had been wrongly allowed. The petitioners have thereupon moved this Court and obtained the present rule to show cause why the order of the District Judge should not be set aside and that of the Munsif restored or why such other or further orders should not be passed as to this Court may seem fit.

We have heard the parties and considered the facts and circumstances of the case in so far as they bear upon the present Rule. The learned District Judge was undoubtedly Right in his view of the law that the proceedings had automatically abated on the 18th January 1921 under O. XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, and no application for substitution could be entertained after that date, the petitioners by presenting a proper application under O. XXII, r. 9(2), Civil Procedure Code, and only by showing sufficient cause could obtain an order setting aside the abatement. We think, however, that by reason of the application for substitution being readily allowed by the learned Munsif and no objection having been taken by the opposite party at any stage of the protracted proceedings that followed in his Court, the petitioner were deprived of an opportunity to make an application under O. XXII, r. 9(2), Civil Procedure Code, and they were misled by the course of the proceedings that were adopted. The order passed by the learned District Judge reversing the decision of the learned Munsif and dismissing the application for setting aside the sale has also not given the petitioners any such chance, and, as matters stand, they were altogether without any remedy.

It has been pressed on us on behalf of the opposite party that our powers of interference under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, are very limited. In my opinion the case does not fall within clause (a) or (b) but under the first part of clause (c) of that section, "Acting illegally in that clause does not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as "acting with material irregularity" does. In my opinion this part of the clause was advisably left in indefinite language in order to empower the High Court to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts, the justification for the interference being determined upon the grossness and palpableness of the error complained of and upon the gravity of the injustice resulting from it. In the present case, in my opinion, injustice has been done to the petitioners.

The question then is, what should be our order. Having regard to the fact that the petitioners are all minors with the exception of one who is their guardian and who is said to be a purda nashin Muhammadan lady and who, as far as can be made out, is also illiterate an application on their behalf under O. XXII, r. 9(2), Civil Procedure Code, stands a good chance of succeeding. I would, therefore, treat the order for substitution as being one setting aside the abatement, and would set aside the order of the learned District Judge and remit the appeal to him to be dealt with on the merits. No order is made as to the costs of this Rule.

Walmsley, J.—I agree.

Contract Act (IX of 1872) s. 213—Principal and agent—Principal, whether bound to keep account—Accounts, suit for, when maintainable.

BHUWAN LAL v. MANHORI

Under s. 213 of the Contract Act an agent is under statutory obligation to render accounts to his principal but the principal is under no counter-statutory obligation of the same nature towards the agent. Where no duty is cast upon the defendant under the law to keep an account, the plaintiff cannot demand an account from him merely on the ground that the defendant has, as a matter of fact, kept an account.

The right to claim a statement of account is an unusual form of relief only granted in certain specific cases and can only be claimed when the relationship between the parties is such that this is the only relief which will enable the claimant to satisfactorily assert his legal rights.

Jowahir Singh v. Haria Mal, 60 P. R. 1819, followed.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for Mr. Zafarullah Khan, for the Appellant.

Mr. Oertel, for the Respondents.

Second Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 16th May 1923, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 9th April 1923, passing a preliminary decree for rendition of accounts.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for an adjustment of accounts brought by the plaintiffs, the sons of a certain contractor, who, it is alleged, did some building work for the defendant. A preliminary decree for rendition of accounts was passed by the Trial Court and the judgment was upheld on appeal by the learned District Judge on the 16th of May 1923. The defendant has now come up in second appeal to this Court.

The case, in my opinion, is clearly governed by Jowahir Singh v. Haria Mal (1), where it was laid down that "the right to claim a statement of accounts is an unusual form of relief only granted in certain specific cases and is only to be claimed when the relationship between the parties is such that this is the only relief which will enable the claimant to satisfactorily assert his legal rights."

In the present case it is clear that there was no duty cast upon the defendant under the law to keep an account, and that the proper relief to claim for the plaintiffs was to have brought a suit for a specific sum and to have asked the defendant to produce his account-books as evidence in support of their (the plaintiffs') case. Under section 213 of the Contract Act an agent is under a statutory obligation to render accounts to his principal, but the principal is under no counter-statutory obligation of the same nature towards the agent.

It is urged by the respondent's Counsel that though, ordinarily, the principal is not bound to render accounts to his agent, yet in the present case there was a specific agreement to the effect that the defendant would keep accounts. There is, however, no evidence on the record in support of this special agreement and I must, therefore, hold that there is no force in this argument. The mere fact that the defendant did keep an account does not entitle the plaintiffs to the relief claimed. In my opinion, on the evidence produced, it has not been established that the defendant was under any obligation to keep an account for the plaintiffs' benefit and I must, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. Under the special circumstances of the case, I order that the parties should bear their own costs throughout.

Limitation Act (Act IX of 1908) s. 9—Second Appeal—Question of Limitation, when can be raised.

When a question of limitation is not a question purely of law but one of mixed fact and law the Second Appellate Court cannot go into it of its own accord under section 3 of the Limitation Act and dismiss the suit as barred although limitation was not set up as a defence.

BHUWAN LAL v. MANHORIA

Appeal against the decree of District Judge, Chhindwara, dated the 22nd February 1922.

Mr. A. V. Wazalwar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. Guptu and A. C. Roy, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has been argued at great length on both sides. After carefully considering the arguments addressed and perusing the records, I am of opinion that the decision arrived at by the lower Appellate Court on the important question of Sumaranlal's alleged exclusion from the joint family for more than 12 years prior to the date of the present suit is correct. If, in spite of the repeated demands of Sumaranlal and his mother, commencing from the date of the Exhibit 4 D-3, dated 20th August 1890 and ending with Exhibit 4 D-8, dated 4th December 1906 which was after Sumaranlal became a major, and which are relied upon as proving Sumaranlal's exclusion to his knowledge from joint family by his father during his own lifetime, and after his death, by his brothers the present appellants, there was mutation of names in favour of Sumaranlal after the father's death, I cannot understand how the appellants can successfully contend that Sumaranlal was excluded from enjoyment of his status as a joint co-parcener. Exhibit 2 D-2 is another piece of evidence which clearly imports an admission on the part of Bhuwanlal in the year 1913 of the subsisting title of Sumaranlal to the joint family property. He, no doubt, asserted in that Exhibit a right to the share of Sumaranlal on the ground that by partition or an arrangement effected between them the share of Sumaranlal had become his. The title, if it had prevailed, would have negatived the right of Sumaranlal to the property and would have precluded the attaching creditor from selling Sumaranlal's interest in execution of his decree and there would have been no occasion for anybody to purchase it. But the objection which Bhuwanlal preferred on the basis of this title or arrangement was disallowed, and the property was ordered to be put to auction and actually sold and it was Bhuwanlal who became the auction-purchaser. But the sale was not confirmed in favour of Bhuwanlal. This piece of conduct on the part of Bhuwanlal of arranging to acquire by partition, or by auction Sumaranlal's interest, clearly shows that he regarded Sumaranlal to have a subsisting interest in the property in 1913. Sumaranlal paid up the decretal amount and Bhuwanlal got back the purchase-money.

The plaintiff became a purchaser of Sumaranlal's interest long after these incidents took place. The lower Courts have disbelieved the evidence tending to show that Sumaranlal's demands were refused. Under these circumstances, the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the appellants failed to prove that they had been in adverse possession of the property in suit for more than 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, is supportable by evidence proper for consideration and is not liable to attack in second appeal.

A minor question about the present suit being barred by limitation when instituted in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge had been noticed by me, but on going through the record carefully I find that the suit was originally filed on 25th July 1919 in Munsif's Court, but the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court on 22nd April 1920. It was re-presented either on the 23rd or 27th of April 1920 to the Court of Senior Subordinate Judge. Whether on the 23rd after presentation it remained with plaintiff until 27th April 1920 is not very clear and as it was doubtful whether the correction which I find in the plaint was made before 23rd or after it, I think that the question of limitation is not a question purely of law but one of mixed fact and law, and I cannot, therefore, go into this question of my own accord under section 3 of the Limitation Act, which entitles a Court to dismiss a suit as barred although limitation was not set up as a defence.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Costs in the Courts below will be paid as already ordered.

Specific Performance, suit for—Contract of sale, subject to approval of Solicitors, if valid—Purchaser, if can pray for enquiry into vendors' title—Bankruptcy of plaintiff, effect of—Mutuality of contract, doctrine of, when applicable.

An agreement for sale subject to the approval of the Solicitors is a perfectly valid and enforceable agreement. [p. 961, col. 1.]

It is open to the purchaser to claim an enquiry into the title of the vendor of the property, but he must accept the title as it is, if he chooses to purchase the property. [p. 961, col. 1.]

If time be made the essence of the contract, that may be waived by the conduct of the purchaser; and if the time is once allowed to pass, and the parties go on negotiating for completion of the purchase then time is no longer of the essence of the contract. [p. 961, col. 2.]

Webb v. Hughes, (1870) 10 Eq. 281; 30 L. J. Ch. 606; relied upon.

But a mere extension of time, and nothing more, is only a waiver to the extent of substituting the extended time for the original time, and not an utter destruction of the essential character of the time. [p. 961, col. 2.]

Barclay v. Messenger, (1871) 43 L. J. Ch. 419 at p. 456; 30 L. T. 251; 22 W. R. 522, and Haji Fakir Mahmood v. Shaik Abdulla, 12 B. 615; 6 Imp. Dec. (N. S.) 922, relied upon.

If a plaintiff (purchaser) in a suit for specific performance becomes a bankrupt before the institution of the suit, he cannot have the contract enforced specifically. But it is otherwise if he becomes bankrupt after his suit has been decreed and the purchase money is deposited by him. [p. 965, col. 1.]

There is no authority for holding that the principle of mutuality applicable to suits for specific performance of contracts before the institution of a suit, applies to the parties after the suit has been decreed and the money has been deposited by the purchaser before he becomes a bankrupt. [p. 965, col. 2.]

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter, for the Appellant.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhury, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract for sale of a garden called the "Kundu" garden at Howrah. An agreement was entered into on the 10th June 1919 between the plaintiff (the vendee), now represented by the Official Assignee, and the defendant and the terms of the contract are embodied in the receipt executed by the defendant (the vendor) which runs thus : "Received from Babu Chaturbhui Dosa the sum of Rs. 2,001" (rupees two thousand and one) only as earnest-money and in part payment of purchase-money in respect of my 22 bighas of land including land covered by water more or less at Balkea on Grand Trunk Road known as "Kundu Bagan" which I have agreed to sell and he has agreed to purchase free from all incumbrances but subject to approval of title by his Solicitors Messrs. Khaitan & Co. at the rate of Rs. 150 (one hundred and fifty) per cottah. I have agreed that all necessary parties will join in the conveyance and that the sale will be completed within one month from the date of delivery of title deeds. Time being of the essence of the contract."

The title-deeds were sent to the purchaser's Solicitors, on the 12th June 1919. Messrs. Chatterjee & Co., were the vendor's Solicitors and Messrs. Khaitan & Co. were the Solicitors of the vendee and for shortness' sake we shall in our judgment refer to them as Chatterjees and Khaitans. There was some correspondence between the Solicitors of the parties about the Surveyor who has to measure the land. Ultimately, it was agreed that there should be two Surveyors one Mr. C. K. Sarkar, for the vendor and Mr. Johnstone, for the purchaser, and that they would measure the land on the 5th July 1919. On that day some measurement was made which, however, was not completed because there was jungle on the land. It is said on behalf of the vendors that there were merely shrubs on the land. Whether they were shrubs or jungle, the measurement was not completed on that day, because the land was not cleared of them. The Khaitans, on the 9th July 1919, wrote to the Chatterjees that the shrubs should be cleared, and on the 11th July, they again enquired whether the jungle had been cleared or not. The Chatterjees replied that the jungle had been cleared by the vendor on "last Sunday," that is, the 6th July. The evidence upon the question whether the further measurement was to be taken up within two or three days from the 5th July, or was to be made after the purchaser's Solicitors received intimation of the jungle having been cleared is conflicting. There is the evidence of Mr. Johnstone's man, Pramatha Nath Mukherjee, who was examined on behalf of the plaintiff, and evidence of Mooktaram Ghose, an assistant of the defendant's surveyor Mr. Sirkar, on the point. This much is clear from the evidence that the Survey could not be completed on the 5th July, and having regard to the fact that in the account-books of the defendant (the vendor), the expenses for clearing the jungle are entered on dates between the 6th July 1919, and that Rs. 38-10-0 was paid to 103 labourers at the rate of 6 annas per day for each, as appears from Ext. D (the account-books of the defendant) the defendant's story that the jungle had been cleared on the 6th July cannot be accepted. On the 12th July, the Chatterjees wrote to the Khaitans that their client had arranged with the Surveyor, Mr. Sirkar, to resume the Survey on Monday (the 14th July). Nothing appears to have been done on the 14th July, and on that day the Chatterjees wrote to the Khaitans that the time limited by the agreement had expired on Saturday the 12th; that the defendant was prepared, as a matter of grace, to allow the plaintiff to complete the measurement by "to-day," and that as the plaintiff had not availed himself of the period of grace, the defendant would stand upon his legal right to terminate the contract and asked for return of the title-deeds. The Khaitans evidently ignored the above letter and on the 17th July sent "requisition on title." On the 23rd July Khaitans wrote to Chatterjee that his client "has always been and still ready to complete the purchase." On the same day the Chatterjees asked Khaitans for return of documents without further delay, and the latter inquired whether they were required for drawing the conveyance.

It appears that on the 23rd July Khaitans received a letter from their Surveyor,

Mr. Johnstone, that the area of the land was 23 bighas 3 cottas 30 sq. feet and on 25th July wrote to Chatterjees that the area was 33 bighas 3 cottas 30 sq. feet and enquired whether their Surveyor agreed with the area. This (33 bighas) was evidently a slip. On the 26th July Khaitans sent a draft conveyance for approval of Chatterjee "subject to our requisitions." On the 29th July 1919, the Chatterjees wrote to the Khaitans that the vendor would be prepared to accept the area given by the purchaser's Surveyor, viz., 33 bighas 3 cottas 30 sq. feet and to do all other things necessary for the completion of the transaction provided the purchase was completed within a fortnight of the approval of the draft conveyance, time being of the essence of the contract. This was stated to be "without prejudice." On the next day, that is, on the 30th July, the Khaitans wrote to the Chatterjees as follows:—"We accept your client's offer of completing the purchase within a fortnight after the approval of the draft conveyance. The area given by our Surveyor is 23 bighas 3 cottas 30 sq. ft." to which the Chatterjees replied as follows:—"Our letter of yesterday was written on the basis of the measurement given in your letter of the 25th instant, viz., 33 bighas 3 cottas and 30 sq. ft. we are surprised to find that you say in your present letter that the area is 23 bighas 3 cottas 30 sq. ft." and that, in the circumstances, they would forward a copy of the letter to their clients and that unless confirmed by their clients "our letter of yesterday, as is obvious, will be inoperative." Some further correspondence followed, and on the 9th October 1919, the Khaitans wrote to the Chatterjees regretting unnecessary delay and intimating that if the latter did not complete the sale within a week, the plaintiff would institute a suit for specific performance. The correspondence ended on the 21st October 1919 on which day the Chatterjees wrote to the Khaitans that there was no subsisting contract between the purchaser and their clients and that further correspondence would be wholly useless.

The suit was instituted on the 22nd November 1919. The suit was decreed by the Court below, and the defendant has appealed to this Court.

KAMAT, KRISHNA KUNDU CHOWDHURY v. CHATOORBHUI DASSA

The first ground taken in the appeal is that the contract was not specifically enforceable because there was no mutuality, and that for two reasons. The first is, that the sale was to be subject to the approval of the Solicitors and, secondly, that the plaintiff had become an insolvent. With regard to the first, the agreement for the sale of the property, "subject to the title being approved by the Solicitors," of the purchaser was a perfectly valid agreement, and with regard to the second, the bankruptcy took place after the suit had been decreed by the Court below.

The second contention is that specific performance ought to have been refused on the ground that the plaint was not a proper plaint for specific performance because the plaintiff prayed for an enquiry into the defendants' title to the property and for a decree for sale if the title was approved by the plaintiffs' Solicitors. But it is open to a party to claim an enquiry into the title of the vendor to the property only that he must accept the title as it is, if he chooses to purchase the property. (See Williams on Vendor and Purchaser, 3rd Edition, page 114). In the present case the purchaser by taking a decree has accepted the title.

The third ground taken is, that the question of waiver set up by the learned Subordinate Judge does not arise at all, and that, on the other hand, it was absolutely necessary for him to decide the last portion of issue No. 3, and that if there was no evidence on the point the suit should have been dismissed. Now, the fourth paragraph of the plaint set up an agreement for an extension of time and an issue was raised, namely, the third issue, on the point. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the question of waiver and the question of extension of time together; and the question of waiver of the right of the vendor to have the contract completed within the time fixed is treated as substantially the same as the question of extension of time; as would appear from the concluding portion of the decision on issue No. 3.

The fourth ground is, that the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong in laying down as a proposition of law that, even if time is originally of the essence of the contract, the essentiality is destroyed by the extension of time, relying upon the case of Webb v.

Hughes (1). In that case it was observed that, "if time be made the essence of the contract, that may be waived by the conduct of the purchaser; and if the time is once allowed to pass, and the parties go on negotiating for completion of the purchase then time is no longer of the essence of the contract." That case is distinguishable because it was not a case where the time was extended for a definite period by agreement between the parties. In the case of B Barclay v. Messenger (2), Jessel M. R. held that "a mere extension of time, and nothing more, is only a waiver to the extent of substituting the extended time for the original time, and not an utter destruction of the essential character of the time." That case was followed in Haji Pakir v. Shaikh Abdulla (3). Although that is so, in the present case the time was not extended only for two days (from the 12th to the 14th July) as contended on behalf of the appellant. In the letter dated the 12th July by the Chatterjees to the Khaitans, it is stated that the Survey would be resumed on the 14th July. It does not mean that time for completing the contract was to be extended by two days only, but that the Survey was to be resumed on the 14th July and the subsequent correspondence goes to negative the case that time was extended by two days only. We, therefore, think that, although the learned Judge is not right in the view he has taken of the Law, it does not affect his decision.

The fifth ground taken is that the Subordinate Judge has taken a wrong view of the evidence in holding that the breach of contract was on the part of the defendants. We have referred to the correspondence and we have been shown that the land could not be surveyed within the time fixed because the jungle had not been cleared by the vendor.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended that Mr. Johnstone, the Surveyor, did not go upon the land at any time after the 5th July and that he submitted his report on the 25th July without going on the land again, which shows that the non-clearance of jungle was merely an excuse set up by the plaintiff. But there can be no doubt upon the evidence that the land could not be surveyed because the jungle was not cleared before the 12th July. The learned Subordinate Judge has discussed the evidence and has come to the conclusion that there were no laches on the part of the plaintiff and that the contract was not completed within the time fixed owing to the default of the defendant. The evidence has been discussed before us, and we are unable to differ from the view taken by the Court below.

Then, it is contended that the lower Court is wrong in holding that the preparation of a plan was necessary. Some authorities have been cited to us on the point, but it is unnecessary to discuss them having regard to the fact that in the present case, the parties contemplated preparation of a plan, as the letter dated the 21st June 1919, by the Khaitans to the Chatterjees expressly asked the latter to appoint a time for a Survey of the garden plot and the preparation of a plan.

The sixth ground taken is, that the plaintiff having become an insolvent, the decree for specific performance cannot be enforced and the learned Vakil has relied upon the principle of mutuality. There is no doubt that if the plaintiff had become a bankrupt before the institution of the suit, he could not have enforced the contract. We need only to refer to Fry on Specific Performance, 6th Edition, Article 949 and to Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 27, page 58. In the present case, however, the bankruptcy took place after the suit had been decreed.

The learned Vakil for the appellant relied upon Fry on Specific Performance, para. 951, where the learned author refers to section 55 of the English Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (the provisions of which correspond to a certain extent to the provisions of section 62 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act), and says: "Accordingly specific performance cannot be enforced against a purchaser's trustee in bankruptcy without his consent." Section 62 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act upon which also reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant runs as follows:—"Where any part of the property of an insolvent consists of land of any tenure burdened with onerous covenants, of shares or stocks in companies, of unprofitable contracts, or of any other property that is unsaleable, or not readily saleable, by reason of its binding the possessor thereof to the performance of any onerous act or to the payment of any sum of money, the Official Assignee may, notwithstanding that he may have endeavoured to sell or have taken possession of the property, or exercised any act of ownership in relation thereto, but subject always to the provisions hereinafter contained in that behalf, by writing signed by him at any time within twelve months after the insolvent has been adjudged insolvent, disclaim the property."

It is contended that the principle of mutuality should also be extended after the decree for specific performance has been passed. But, in the first place, specific performance may be enforced against the trustee in bankruptcy of a vendor: See Fry on Specific Performance, paragraph 951. In the next place, in the present case, as already stated, the bankruptcy of the purchaser took place after the suit had been decreed, and the money had been deposited by the purchaser. No authority has been shown to us for holding that the principle of mutuality applicable to suits for specific performance of contracts before the institution of a suit, applies to the parties after the suit has been decreed and the money has been deposited by the purchaser before he becomes a bankrupt.

The last contention is that the decree for specific performance should not be allowed to be enforced for two reasons. The first is, that the time appointed by the Court below for payment of the money by the purchaser had expired before the money was deposited, and the Court had no power to extend the time fixed by the decree for the purpose. The question, whether the Court had the power to extend the time for payment fixed by the decree or not, is one which cannot be gone into in this appeal, but may be raised by the appellant in proper proceedings. The second ground is, that the plaintiff having withdrawn the money deposited by him in the Court below after the appeal had been preferred, the decree has become infructuous and the Official Assignee is not entitled to enforce the decree for specific performance. It appears that after the appeal had been filed and before the plaintiff became bankrupt he applied to this Court for taking back money which had been deposited by him in the Court below. This

KUNDAN LAL V. QADIR AHMAD ALI

Court thereupon made an order that the plaintiff might withdraw the money at his own risk. The question, what is the effect of such withdrawal of money, however, may be raised by the plaintiff, when, and, if, the Official Assignee applies for enforcement of the decree for specific performance.

The learned Vakil for the Official Assignee intimated that his client is ready to deposit the amount decreed in the Court below, if so ordered by this Court. We cannot make any such order, as the learned Pleader for the defendants says that they would oppose any application for depositing the amount decreed by the Official Assignee and for enforcement of the decree for specific performance.

In the result, the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs. The respondent does not press the cross-objections. It is accordingly dismissed. We make no order as to cost.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 30—Wagering contract.—Agreement not to make or demand delivery—Burden of proof.

If a person makes a bet and, in order to protect himself against a refusal by the other person to pay him if he wins, takes great care to clothe the transaction with the appearance of a valid contract and to create evidence to that effect, it is not easy for him, if he loses, to remove that clothing and rebut that evidence, and he cannot succeed unless he puts forward evidence to the contrary which is stronger than that which he deliberately created.

In order to establish that a contract is one of wagering it is not sufficient for the defendant to show that neither party intended or contemplated that there should be any delivery of goods, he must show that there was an agreement that neither party would have the right to make or demand delivery.

Appeal against the decree of the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 28th March 1923 in Civil Suit No. 143 of 1922.

Mr. Brachshah, for the Applicant.Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Non-Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is one of the common type of cases in which the defendant relies on the plea, to which Coutts-Protter, J., in Sukdevadoss v. Diwan Bahadur Govindoss (1) applies the not over strong term of "not over honest", that the reciprocal promises between himself and the plaintiff constituted nothing more than a wager and he cannot, therefore, be compelled to fulfil his promise, though he would have expected and done his best to compel the plaintiff to carry out his if things had gone the other way. This defence succeeded in the Small Cause Court, and the plaintiff has applied to this Court for revision of the decision.

The facts are these. On the 18th of February 1921 the defendant agreed to buy ten bales of yarn of a specified kind from the plaintiff at Rs. 263-7-0 each. The plaintiff agreed to deliver the yarn at that price on the 28th of March 1921 and to receive payment on delivery. The defendant also signed a "chitthi" or memorandum of the contract, in which the word "hazar" occurs. That means that the goods were to be actually delivered on the date stated. On that date the plaintiff sent three bales to the defendant in a cart and said he had the remaining seven ready for delivery, but the price had then fallen, and the defendant sold back five bales at Rs. 236 and five at Rs. 240 each. He again signed a "chitthi" in respect of each parcel of five bales and the word "hazar" appears in both of them. That left him owing Rs. 253-2-0 on the two transactions, and the plaintiff claimed that amount in the present suit.

In addition to his plea that the agreement was a pure wager and not an enforceable

(1) 76 Ind. Cas. 893; 45 M. L. J. 716; 18 L. W. 911; (1924) M. W. N. 133; 33 M. L. T. 223.

KUNDAN LAL v. QADIR AHMAD ALI

contract, the defendant alleged that he actually paid Rs. 215-10-0 on the day following the re-sale at the instance of the plaintiff and on his behalf to a third party, and that he had offered to pay the balance of Rs. 37-8-0 to the plaintiff if he would come to his shop and ask for it. The offer of the balance, coupled with an allegation of a payment of Rs. 215-10-0, certainly was made, but the payment itself never was.

In the Small Cause Court it has been held that the agreement was a pure wager, as neither party ever intended or contemplated delivery of the yarn; it was entirely a matter of the payment of the difference between the price stated in the agreement and that on the date stated in it. This finding is based on the fact that the plaintiff has frequently been a party to similar transactions in which no delivery has been made, or even offered or demanded, and the defendant is not a dealer in yarn and never bought or sold any before. The tender of the three bales and the offer of the rest are regarded by the learned Judge as a mere device to lend to the agreement the colour of an intention to deliver the goods, as "peshbandi" in short. It is clear that the burden of proof has been wrongly placed, or rather that all the evidence on the side of the plaintiff has been left out of sight and consideration, with the exception of the one item of the offer of delivery.

If a person makes a bet and, in order to protect himself against a refusal by the other person to pay him if he wins, takes great care to clothe the transaction with the appearance of a valid contract and to create evidence to that effect, it is naturally not easy for him, if he loses, to remove that clothing and rebut that evidence. It is, however, obvious that he cannot succeed unless he puts forward evidence to the contrary which is stronger than that which he deliberately created. It is also very foolish and short-sighted of him to attempt to do so, as, if he succeeds, the other party to some future similar bet which he wins is also likely to succeed in the same way, but with that we are not concerned in a civil suit.

Both parties to the present agreement said very clearly that it was an ordinary contract for the sale and purchase of yarn, which was to be delivered on payment on a future date, and they went through all the usual formalities of such a contract. To prove that neither of them meant what he said and that they really agreed, in direct contradiction of all their words and actions, that there should be no delivery but only a payment of the difference, would require a great deal more than the probability, which is hardly more than a possibility, arising out of the fact that there has been no delivery but only a payment of differences even in thousands of exactly similar transactions between themselves or between others. That is all there is in the present case to rebut the strong evidence created advisedly by the parties, of the contract being an ordinary sale of goods, and that evidence has been left entirely out of consideration. The offer of the three bales may not corroborate it strongly but it certainly does not contradict it.

But, further, as was pointed out by Cotts-Trotter, J., in the case already mentioned, it is not sufficient for the defendant in a case like this to show that neither party intended or contemplated that there should be any delivery of goods. He has to show, further, that there was an agreement that neither party would have the right to make or demand delivery. Any agreement or even understanding of that sort between the parties is very clearly disproved, not only by the evidence to the contrary which both of them were at such pains to create, but also by the admission of the plaintiff's right to deliver the yarn which the defendant made when the three bales were brought to his shop; his re-sale of the whole ten bales is an acceptance of delivery.

The decree of the lower Court dismissing the plaintiff's suit will be set aside. In place of it a decree will issue ordering the defendant to pay to the plaintiff the sum of Rs. 253-5-6, which includes the cost of a registered notice sent to the defendant, together with interest on that amount at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the lower Court's decree to the date of payment, and all the costs incurred by the plaintiff in both Courts. The pleader's fee in this Court will be fifteen rupees.

Certain tenants filed a suit against their landlord for commutation of grain rents into money rents, and the Deputy Collector fixed the rate at which commutation was to be made. The landlord appealed on the ground that the rate fixed was too low and calculated the value of the relief sought at the difference between the amount fixed by the Deputy Collector and the amount which he alleged to be correct and paid ad valorem fees on that amount;

Held, that the provision applicable to the case was Article 17 (iii) or Article 17 (vi) of Schedule II to the Court Fees Act and Court-fees must be paid as laid down in that article.

Sanble :—An order under section 12 of the Court-Fees Act is only final as regards the valuation of a suit and not when it relates to the category into which a suit falls. In the latter case the order is open to revision.

Case-law referred to.

Petitions under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order of the District Court of Tinnevely, in Appeal Suits Nos. 312 to 316, 318 to 334, 336 to 342, 344 to 359 and 362 of 1920 and 142 to 146, and 148 to 150 of 1921 respectively.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswami Aiyar and A. S. Viswanatha Aiyar, for the Petitioner.

The Government Pleader (Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Aiyar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—All these petitions relate to suits filed by tenants against the landlord for commutation of grain rents into money rents. The Deputy Collector allowed this commutation and fixed the rate at which it was to be made. The landlord appealed to the District Judge on the ground that the rate fixed was too low and he calculated the value of the relief sought at the difference between the amount fixed by the Deputy Collector and the amount which he alleged to be correct and paid ad valorem fees on that amount. The District Judge has held that this is not correct but that a fee of Rs. 10 should be paid on each appeal under Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act, clause 17 (6), holding that it is a suit where it is not possible to estimate the money value of the subject-matter in dispute and which is not otherwise provided for by this Act. Now the petitioner applies to have the order of the District Judge set aside.

A preliminary objection is taken by the learned Government Pleader that no revision can be had in a case of this sort and he relies on two reported cases from the Patna High Court: Chandramani Koer v. Basdeo Narain Singh (1), and Musammatt Lachmibate Kumari v. Nana Kumar Singh (2). It has, however, been held in Lakshmi Amma v. Jamani Jayam Nambiar (3), that an order under section 12 of the Court-Fees Act is only final as regards the valuation of the suit and not when it relates to the category into which that suit falls and in consequence of this it has been held in two cases in this Court that a revision petition will lie: Muthu Pillai v. Muthu Pillar (4), and Dodda Sannekappa v. Sakravva (5). These are decisions of Single Judges, but in other cases also revision has been granted without any discussion of the question of whether it is proper to do so. There is a definite conflict of opinion and we do not feel called upon now to decide the point in view of our decision on the merits.

(5) 36 Ind. Cas. 831.

RAJABAI v. JAGANNATH

This suit is in effect a suit for a declaration that the grain rent shall be commuted into money rent at a certain rate and the appeal is to the same effect, namely, that the commutation shall be at a certain rate higher than that fixed by the first Court. It is argued, first of all, that the case comes under the Court-Fees Act, section 7 (1), which relates to suits for money, but in this case there is no claim for money and certainly the landlord is not entitled to a decree for any amount whatever in this suit.

It is then suggested that clause (7) (iv) (c) is applicable, that is, a suit to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed. Here there is no consequential relief. It might be argued that in the original suit the prayer to enter the amount of rent in the pattah was a consequential relief but that is very doubtful, for the mere fact that the rent is determined ipso facto carried with it the necessity to enter it in the pattah that is issued, and there is no need for a prayer for the grant of pattah. At any rate, in appeal that question is not raised at all and no consequential relief is asked for.

Section 7 (iv) (c) is also suggested as governing this case, i.e., a suit "for a right to some benefit (not herein otherwise provided for) to arise out of land."

In the margin we find the word "for case-ments" and it is quite clear that it must be some such benefit that is contemplated by this section; it cannot mean pecuniary benefit, because pecuniary benefits are otherwise provided for under other clauses.

Finally, the argument is put forward that section 7 (11) (b), namely, to enhance the rent of a tenant having right of occupancy, must be applied. The prior rent in this case was grain rent. The new rent asked for is a money rent, and it is not suggested that the money rent is any greater than the grain rent, but what is asked for is money rent equivalent to the prior grain rent and in that view it certainly is not a prayer to enhance the prior rent. It is merely a prayer to increase the rate fixed by the lower Court which has never actually been the rent levied prior to suit nor prior to the appeal.

These clauses all being inapplicable, we are left with Schedule II, Article 17 (iii), suits for declaration, or 17 (vi) the provision which has been applied by the District Judge. In both these cases, the fee payable is the same and whether it comes under one or the other, the fee ordered to be paid by the District Judge is the correct fee.

The petitions are, therefore, dismissed. There will be no order as to costs. Time for the payment of the proper fee will be extended by one month from this date.

Messrs. D. P. Tiwari, M. R. Bobde, A. D. Mande, and S. K. Barlingay, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—This is a very peculiar application. The applicant who is a minor acting through his next friend has brought a suit in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, against the non-applicant for possession of a large estate. The plaintiff is the daughter of the last owner and the defendant claims to be his adopted son. The written statement of the defendant has not yet been put in.

The applicant applied for the production of the account-books of the family business and their retention in Court, on the ground that there is a likelihood of their being tampered with or destroyed.

This application was filed on 18th October 1923 along with an application for the appointment of a Receiver. Notice was issued to the other side and the date of hearing fixed for 3rd November 1923. An order was issued to the respondent to produce the books in Court on 29th October 1923 and they were brought to Court, but were not placed in the Court's custody. According to the application, plaintiff's Counsel urged that the books should be retained, but nothing was done. On 3rd November 1923 the defendant filed objections and counter-statements and plaintiff's Counsel again urged that the account-books should be kept in Court, as there was an immediate danger of their being tampered with. No order was passed for their retention, though it appears from the order-sheet that certain copies of accounts were given to the plaintiff, and the case was fixed for 24th November 1923.

On that date the plaintiff put in a statement that some of the accounts had been destroyed and a report had been made to the Police by the defendant's agent that the accounts of the shop at Ajni had been stolen and burned, and reiterated the request for an immediate order for the production of the account-books. The case was adjourned to 15th December 1923.

On 29th November 1923 the plaintiff again put in a similar request. The Court ordered notice to be served on the defendant's Pleader and fixed December 3rd for the hearing as the defendant's Pleader asked for time to answer the allegations.

It may here be noted that 29th November 1923 was a Thursday. The 1st of December was a holiday for the elections and the 2nd December was Sunday. On the same day, 29th November, the plaintiff filed the present application for revision asking this Court to order the production and retention in Court of the account-books, or ordering the lower Court to pass such orders immediately.

As the application was represented to be of an extremely urgent nature, notice was ordered to issue to the defendant for hearing next day and the application was heard accordingly, but, even so, it was not possible, owing to two holidays intervening, to deliver the order before the 3rd December, the day fixed for hearing by the lower Court.

The order which is sought to be revised is an order adjourning the hearing of the application till 3rd December. There can be no doubt that there can be no revision of such an order. There is really no order to revise, as the lower Court has not yet decided the matter one way or the other.

The learned Counsel for the applicant is obliged to admit that, while the matter is under trial by another Court, this Court cannot order the production of the accounts. Nor can it order the Additional District Judge to pass an order to that effect.

The case obviously does not fall under section 115, Civil Procedure Code, and it has been held by the Privy Council in Balkrishna v. Vasudeva(1) that that section refers only to cases of failure to exercise or improper exercise of jurisdiction. There is nothing of the kind here. There is no case decided, not even the determination of an issue, and the only interlocutory order passed is to adjourn the matter to give the defendant time to reply, the adjournment being for four days. Even if the order was inexpedient, this Court could not interfere.

DIWAN CHAND v. HIRA NAND

It has been held in Bai Rami v. Jagu Dullabh (2) that the High Court has no power to call for the record in a pending case of this nature.

A large number of recent decisions have been quoted on both sides. The non-applicant relies on:—

1. Sultanat Jahan Begam v. Sunder Lal (3); 2. Budbhu Lal v. Mewa Ram (4); 3. Jhunku Lal v. Bisheshwar Das (5); 4. A. Subharayudu v. T. Lakshminarasamma (6); 5. Balamony v. Ramasami Chettiar (7); 5. In the matter of the petition of Nawal Singh (8).

The applicant relies on:—

I have referred to all these decisions, but they all show that no such application as the present will lie, nor is the case covered by section 151, Civil Procedure Code.

The application must, therefore, be rejected with costs. I express no opinion on the merits, which must be left to be decided by the lower Court. I have no doubt that, in view of the applicant's allegations, the Additional District Judge will see that it is desirable that the question of the production of the accounts should be disposed of one way or the other as soon as possible.

It may, however, not be out of place to make a few remarks as to the general policy of the law with regard to such applications. It appears to me to be a sound rule that such applications should not lie, because if the conduct of pending cases is to be taken out of the hands of the trying Court at every step, by the applications for revision, no original suit would ever come to an end and the trying Judge would be deprived of all discretion. The result would be disastrous to the administration of justice. In the present case the trying Judge has not even had the opportunity of making up his mind and it is not the business of this Court to make up its mind for him.

The application is consequently rejected with costs. Pleador's fee Rs. 10.

MISCELLANEOUS SECOND CIVIL APPEAL
No. 1325 OF 1923.

November 6, 1923.

Present:—Mr. Justice Martineau.

IFFS—APPELLANTS
versus

HIRA NAND AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Pre-emption suit—Amount enhanced on appeal—Failure to pay enhanced amount—Dismissal of suit—Amount paid, whether can be withdrawn.

Where a pre-emption suit is dismissed automatically owing to the pre-emptor's failure to pay into Court the enhanced amount decreed on appeal, the pre-emptor is entitled, under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, to the return of the amount deposited by him in Court under the decree of the Trial Court.

Bhagwan Singh v. Ummatul Hasmain, A. W. N. (1896) 42, 18 A. 262, 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 881, relied on. Abdulla v. Amir-ud-din, 113 P. L. R. 1902; 76 P. R. 1902, distinguished.

DHARAMDAS THAWERDAS v. THE PERSIAN GULF STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

Miscellaneous second appeal from the order of the District Judge, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 30th April 1923, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Attock, at Campbellpur, dated the 1st March 1923, and dismissing the application for refund of Rs. 7,000.

Mr. D. R. Puri, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. S. Bhagat and I. C. Chopra, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—A decree was passed for possession of land by right of pre-emption conditionally on payment of Rs. 7,000. The decree-holders paid the money and obtained possession of the land in execution, but, afterwards, on the appeal of the vendee, the amount payable to him was enhanced by Rs. 500, which the decree-holders were directed to pay by the 21st December 1922, and it was provided in the decree of the Appellate Court that if the money were not paid by that time the suit should stand dismissed with costs. The decree-holders did not pay the additional sum of Rs. 500 and they applied to the first Court for a refund of the Rs. 7,000 which they had paid. The Subordinate Judge granted their application but the District Judge on appeal held, following Abdulla v. Amir-ud-din (1), that the vendee had control of the purchase-money and that the decree-holders were not entitled to take it back. The latter have filed a second appeal in this Court.

The case relied upon by the learned District Judge was one in which, after a pre-emption decree had been passed, a reversioner of the vendor obtained a decree declaring that the sale should not affect his rights, and it was held that the pre-emptor was not entitled to cancel his purchase and take back the money. That case was clearly distinguishable from the present one as the decree for pre-emption was in no way affected by the decree subsequently obtained by the reversioner of the vendor. In the present case, on the other hand, the decree for pre-emption no longer exists and the suit of the pre-emptor has been dismissed. Bhagwan Singh v. Ummat-ul-husnain (2) is a case in point in which, where a suit for pre-emption was dismissed on appeal, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to a refund of the money which he had paid. Section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code applies, and it makes no difference that the dismissal of the suit has resulted automatically from the appellants' failure to pay the full price.

I accept the appeal, set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the order of the first Court. The respondent Hira Nand will pay the appellants' costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

THE PERSIAN GULF STEAM NAVIGATION Co., LTD., BOMBAY—DEFENDANTS

Ship—Deck Cargo—Jettison—Right of cargo owner, to contribution for general average—"At merchants' risk", meaning of—Bill of Lading, Office of—Exemption clauses.

A jettison of goods which are carried on deck, even without the consent of cargo owner, does not entitle their owner to contribution unless the carriage of goods on deck is permitted by the established custom of navigation or where the other cargo owners have consented that goods jettisoned should be carried on the deck of the ship. [p. 974, col. 2].

The office of a Bill of Lading is to provide for the rights and liabilities of the parties in reference to the contract to carry and it is not concerned with liabilities to contribution for general average. [p. 976, col. 1].

Burton v. English, 12 Q. B. D. 218, referred to.

The endorsement "at merchants' risk" on a Bill of Lading will not exempt a ship-owner from liability in a case of proper jettison but will exempt him from liability in case of an improper jettison. The words cover a case not only of improper jettison but of a loss caused by a collision and stranding owing to the negligence of the Master or crew, in fact, any act which, being done by them as servants of the ship-owner, would otherwise make him liable.

If a ship-owner wishes to introduce into his Bill of Lading so novel a clause as one exempting him from general average contribution, a clause which not only deprives the shippers of an ancient and well understood right but which might avoid his policy and deprive him also of all recourse to the Underwriter he ought not only to make it clear in words but also to make it conspicuously, inserting it in such a type and in such a part of the document as that a person of ordinary capacity and care could not fail to see it.

Crooks v. Allen, (1880) 49 L. J. Q. B. 201, referred to.

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit brought by the plaintiffs to recover Rs. 44,000 from the defendants as the value of 29 packages of piece goods jettisoned from the SS. Paroo on the 29th October 1917, being part of a consignment of sugar and piece goods belonging to the plaintiffs which the defendants had contracted to carry from Karachi to Bunder Abbas.

Plaintiff's Munim Bojurnal admittedly got a shipping order from the defendant's agent on 9th July 1917. It is not in dispute that when the goods were taken on board the SS. Paroo the Chief Officer issued Mates Receipts containing a printed clause that the receipt was subject to all the conditions of the Company's Bills of Lading and that the words "On Deck at Shipper's risk" were written on the Mates Receipts. It is further not in dispute that the Mates Receipts bearing the words above referred to were surrendered to the defendant's agents in Karachi and that the plaintiff received in Exchange four Bills of Lading covering the cargo and that the Bills of Lading also contained the endorsement "On Deck at Shipper's risk."

The defendants contend that the cargo was carried on deck with the plaintiff's consent, that they are exempted from liability by virtue of a clause which reads 'Cargo on Deck to be at Shipper's risk and the Ship not to be liable for general average contribution in case of its being jettisoned, damaged or lost overboard.' They further contend that they are exempted from liability by virtue of a clause in the Bill of Lading excepting inter alia the Act of God the King's enemies, accidents, jettison, Barratry of Master or Crew, bursting of Boilers, breakage of machinery or any latent defect in machinery, boilers, hull or appertenances, whether such defect existed before the commencement of or arose or developed during the voyage, unworthiness of ship, provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against such unworthiness. Lastly, the defendants rely on a clause in the Bill of Lading limiting liability for any package to Rs. 500, unless its value has been declared prior to shipment and a special shipping order granted.

My findings on the issues are as follows :—

1. In the affirmative.
2. In the negative. This clause would not, in my opinion, have exempted the ship owner from liability, if any, to contribute in general average.
3. In the affirmative.
4. In the negative.
5. Does not arise ; see finding on issue No 4.
6. The jettisoning was due to an unforeseen and unavoidable accident and to latent defect in the No. 2 tank and ballast pump and to the high swells prevailing at the time.
7. In the affirmative.
8. The decision of this issue was by consent deferred.
9. In the affirmative.
10. In the negative.
11. In the negative.
12. In the affirmative.

With regard to the question whether the defendants were justified in carrying the cargo on deck, the evidence shows that the Mates Receipt contained an endorsement "On deck at Shipper's risk" in the hand-writing of Hendricks, the Chief Officer. The Mates Receipts were surrendered to the defendants without objection and Bills of Lading were received in lieu of the Mates Receipts also bearing the same endorsement. Bojurnal alleges ignorance but the absence of a jot of documentary evidence to show that he protested or complained when Messrs. Donald Graham & Co. refused to insure his goods because they were on Deck at Shipper's risk strongly supports, in my opinion, the defendant's contention that the goods were in fact carried on Deck at Shipper's risk with the defendant's knowledge and consent. Umerbux, the contractor, deposes to the fact that when the owners desired goods to be carried on Deck, they were so carried, otherwise not, and that in the absence of the owner his Tindal would not put goods on board to be carried on Deck. His evidence and that of Girja Shanker shows that certain goods were actually shut out from the SS. Paroo. In addition to this, there is the admitted fact that valuable specie worth Rs. 18,800 was also being carried for the plaintiff in the SS. Paroo. So it was highly probable that a responsible number of the plaintiffs' firm did go on board. I disbelieve the evidence of Bojurnal that he complained to Chunilal. There are no doubt certain discrepancies in the evidence of Umer Bux and Jairam Purshotam, but taking the surrounding circumstances into consideration I am of opinion that it is established that the goods were carried on Deck at Shipper's risk with the knowledge and consent of the Shipper.

Apart from this, the Mates Receipts are dated 16th July; the SS. Paroo did not sail till two days later and the evidence of Umer Bux shows that his clerk used to take the receipts to merchants on the day they were issued. The hand-writing on Ex. 30 in English is proved to be in Assanmal's hand-writing. So the plaintiff had an English knowing person in the firm and if plaintiff objected to the endorsement of the Chief Officer he had time to take action before the ship sailed. He would, in my opinion, in any event be estopped from denying the right of the defendants to carry the Cargo on Deck.

With regard to the question of seaworthiness, there was no doubt a heavy list to starboard on the voyage from Bombay to Karachi owing to the fact that heavy seas were shipped and that a part of the cargo in Nos. 2 and 3 between deck shifted. A list to starboard was also noticed soon after the SS. Paroo left Karachi when she encountered high swells and began pitching heavily and slipping water forward. It does not appear to me, however, that the Paroo was unseaworthy when she left Karachi, for the list was corrected, when Nos. 2 and 4's Port tanks were run up, and the ship was brought upright. The real trouble, it seems to me, did not occur, until two days after she left Karachi, viz., on July 20th, when Tank No. 2 leaked at high pressure, and the Ballast Pump would not work. This resulted in a sudden list of 9 or 10 degrees to port and the flooding of the Engine-room, rendering it necessary to stop the engines. At the request of the Engineers, the ship was heeled to starboard to enable them to pump the water out of the Engine-Room; cargo being shifted for that purpose. Apparently, by an error of judgment, more cargo was shifted than was necessary, for the list to starboard increased to 22 degrees, rendering the position of the ship dangerous. Owing to the list, it was found impossible to shift the deck cargo to the port side, and the deck cargo was dangerous to passengers and crew. This deck cargo, it seems to me, in the circumstances was properly jettisoned, the causes of the jettisoning being an unforeseen and unavoidable accident to and latent defects in the tank and ballast pump and the high swells prevailing at the time.

In considering the question of liability it must be remembered that the deck is not a proper place for cargo. Goods placed there, as Mr. Carver points out in his work on Carriage by Sea, obstruct the working of the ship and are under peculiar risks (see Carver 6th Edition, page 501); and, thus, it is a general rule that a jettison of goods which were on deck does not entitle their owner to contribution: Wright v. Marwood (1). The rule does not, however, apply on voyages where the carrying of goods on deck is permitted by the established custom of navigation; nor, where the other cargo owners have consented that the goods jettisoned should be carried on the deck of the ship: Carver, page 502 Strang v. Scott (2).

In 1917 there was a good market for goods in Basrah, but tonnage was scarce. Steamers used to arrive from Bombay with full cargoes and Karachi goods were shut out. The result was that merchants sometimes sent goods on deck, at their risk, rather than have them shut out. This, it appears to me, was not an established custom of navigation and plaintiff does not allege any, and there is no evidence that other cargo owners consented to plaintiff's goods being on deck.

Mr. Rupchand for the plaintiffs, while conceding that the other cargo owners would not be liable to contribute, contends that the ship owner at any rate was liable, since the latter through his servants consented to the stowage on deck. He points out that the view taken by Lord Bramwell in Wright v. Marwood (1) that the liability to contribute to general average arises out of implied contract did not commend itself to the Master of the Rolls in Burton v. English (3) where it was pointed out that the liability was derived from the Old Rhodian Laws. Lord Justice Bowen, however, observed that once a principle of the law of commerce and the sea is established as a part of the law, you may imagine that those who place their property on board a ship and the ship owner who puts his ship by the Quay to receive cargo, bind themselves by an implied contract which embodies the principle, just as it may be said that those who contract with reference to a custom impliedly make it a portion of the contract. He also observed that the Master as Agent both of the cargo owner and of the ship owner jettisons cargo on the implied basis that contribution will be made by the ship and by the other cargo owners. On equitable grounds, I think, it must be conceded that since the ship and the cargo owners were both parties to the stowage on deck and the ship owner received full freight and was benefited both by the stowage of the cargo on deck, and by the sacrifice, it is only fair that he should contribute towards the loss. But the reason thus would be to apply equitable principles to an Old Law of the Sea. All the writers and authorities, as Lord Bramwell pointed out, appear to be agreed, that, under this law of the sea, a cargo owner is not entitled to contribution in general average if cargo is carried on deck, even if it is carried there without the cargo owner's consent: Wright v. Marwood (1). Lord Bramwell was unable to find any authority in our law to justify the claim, while the law and practice of foreign countries are decidedly to the contrary Wright v. Marwood (1) see also Scrutton, 10th Edition, page 391; Carver, 6th Edition, pages 501—502.

I am of opinion, in the circumstances, that the plaintiff is not entitled to any contribution from the defendant by way of general average.

But in case I am wrong in my view, it is desirable to consider the rights and liabilities of the parties under the clauses relied on by the defendant, exempting the ship owner from liability.

These are four in number, viz:—

1. Endorsements on the Mates Receipts and Bills of Lading, "On deck at Shipper's risk."

2. A clause in the Bill of Lading excepting inter alia "The act of God, the King's enemies, accidents, jettison, or barratry of the Master or Crew, bursting of Boilers, breakage of machinery, or any latent defect in machinery, boilers, hull or appertenances, whether said defect existed before the commencement of or arose or developed during the voyage, unseaworthiness of ship, provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against such unseaworthiness."

3. A clause in the Bill of Lading to the following effect:—"Cargo on deck to be at Shipper's risk and the ship not to be liable for general average contribution in case of its being jettisoned, damage or lost overboard."

4. A clause in the Bills of Lading as follows:—

"The Company will not be accountable for gold, silver, bullion, specie, jewellery, precious stones, plated ware, or other valuables unless the declaration of the value of such goods has been made prior to shipment and a special shipping order granted for the same with which the Bill of Lading shall correspond. The Company will not be liable to pay more than Rs. 500 per freight ton or relatively for any portion of any cargo not expressly declared as aforesaid."

The law bearing on the rights and liabilities of the parties appears to me to be very clearly laid down in the case of Burton v. English (3), where the Court of Appeal, Brett, M. R., Baggally, L. J., and Bowen, L. J., reversed the decision of the Divisional Court. Several important principles appear to me to have been established by that case.

(3) (1884) 12 Q. B. D. 218; 53 L. J. Q. B. 133; 49 L. T. 768; 32 W. R. 655 5 Asp. M. C. 187.

DHARAMDAS THAWERDAS v. THE PERSIAN GULF STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.

There is the great authority of Lord Justice Bowen, that it is a practical canon, but not a rule of legal interpretation, that the office of a Bill of Lading is to provide for the rights and liabilities of the parties in reference to the contract to carry, and that it is not concerned with liabilities to contribution in general average. It is clear from his judgment, that the question whether an exemption clause covers the liability to contribution in general average in a case of proper jettison depends on the intention of the parties. There is nothing to prevent a ship owner from making an exception in his own favour by which he is to be relieved from the ordinary laws of the sea, but if he wishes to do so, he ought to do so in clear words. The words "At merchant's risk" will not exempt a ship owner from liability to contribution in a case of proper jettison but both the Master of the Rolls and Lord Justice Bowen concurred in the view of the Divisional Court that the words "would exempt the ship owner from liability in the case of an improper jettison." The words, as Lord Justice Brett pointed out, would not only cover a case of improper jettison but also a loss caused by a collision or stranding owing to the negligence of the Master or Crew. In fact, any act of the Master or Crew which being done by them as servants of the ship owner, would otherwise make him liable.

Since, in the present case, the jettison was proper, and was not caused by the negligence of the Master or Crew or any unlawful act or default on their part, the words "on Deck at Shipper's risk" in the Mates Receipt and Bills of Lading would not, in my opinion, exclude the right of the plaintiff, if any, to general average contribution. They would, in my opinion, have excluded such right, had plaintiff succeeded in the alternative contention in para 6 (d) of his plaint, that the jettisoning was due to improper stowage.

With regard to the second clause relied on by the defendants, I am of opinion that the context shows that the word jettison means "improper jettison." The word is immediately followed by the words "or barratary of the Master or Crew." This clause, it appears to me, has nothing to do with the right of the cargo owner to contribution in general average in a case of proper jettison. I am fortified in this view by the fact that provision is expressly made in the Bill of Lading for general average, it being declared that general average, if any, is to be according to York-Antwerp Rules. This clause would, however, in my opinion, cover the liability of the ship owner for Tank No. 2 leaking at high pressure on July 20th and the Ballast Pump getting out of order and the consequent damage sustained.

With regard to the third clause relied on by the defendants, I cannot do better than cite the words of Lush, J., in Crooks v. Allen (4), which are as follows:—

"The long list of excepted perils and the much longer list of exemptions and qualifications of which the clause in question is one and which seemed designed to exonerate the ship owners from all liability as carriers and to reduce them substantially to the condition of irresponsible bailees are printed in type so minute though clear, as not only not to attract attention to any of the details but to be only readable by persons of good eyesight. The clause in question comes in about the middle of thirty closely packed small type lines without a break sufficient to attract notice. If a ship owner wishes to introduce into his Bill of Lading so novel a clause as one exempting him from general average contribution, a clause which not only deprives the shipper of an ancient and well understood right, but which might avoid his policy and deprive him also of all recourse to the underwriter, he ought not only to make it clear in words but also to make it conspicuous by inserting it in such type and in such a part of the document as that a person of ordinary capacity and care, could not fail to see it."

Plaintiff has deposed to the fact that he was unaware that the Bill of Lading contained this clause. I see no reason to doubt his statement and I am of opinion, for the reasons so ably expressed by Mr. Justice Lush, that the exemption clause did not protect the ship owner from his liability, if any, to contribute in general average.

With regard to the fourth and last exemption clause, I think it is established that plaintiff was well aware of this provision in the Bill of Lading. Plaintiff's firm were regular Shippers to the Persian Gulf and had been shipping goods from 1915 or 1916. On the voyage, the subject of the suit, they shipped a valuable consignment of specie under a special Shipping Order.

In the absence of an established custom to carry cargo on deck, I am of opinion, for the reasons already mentioned, that a cargo owner would not be entitled to general average contribution in respect of goods carried on deck without the consent of the other cargo owners.

If the doctrine of general average is applicable to such circumstances, I am of opinion that the clause limiting the liability would clearly apply to the rights and liabilities of the parties in general average, as well as to their other rights and liabilities under the contract, for no ship owner in his senses would agree to cargo of value being carried on deck, when, as Lord Bramwell points out, it would be liable to special risks, including the liability to be jettisoned first of all, and the question of the value of the cargo would also be a factor influencing the owners of the other cargo in giving or withholding their consent. Certain contentions were raised in the written statement of the defendant, but they are not seriously pressed by Mr. Lobo, who called no evidence with regard to them. It was contended, for instance, that no claim for short delivery having been made within a month, the ship owner was absolved from liability. The claim of the plaintiffs, however, was not a claim for short delivery, but for general average or for the value of the goods jettisoned. Plaintiffs made a claim on the defendants through their agents when they became aware of the loss. The goods were shipped in Karachi and the amount was payable according to the Bills of Lading either at Bombay or at the Port of Shipment. A part of the cause of action clearly arose in Karachi and this Court, in my opinion, has jurisdiction.

For the reasons I have mentioned, I dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs.

Second appeal against the decree of the 1st Additional District Judge of Aligarh, dated the 7th of June 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmed, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Abu Ali, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The remand findings have now been received. They are to the effect that the deed in suit was executed during the death illness of Sadal Khan. Much that has been said by the learned District Judge who has arrived at the remand finding would go to show that Sadal Khan was not in a condition to know what he was executing on the date when the alleged deed of gift is said to have come into being. But it is not open to the Court to arrive at a decision to the effect that he was not in a condition to know what he had executed, in view of the finding of Mr. Hunter. That finding cannot be attacked in second appeal. On the remaining point, however, as to whether the deed is of no effect under the doctrine of Marz-ul-maut it is for this Court to arrive at a finding. The deed was executed on the 23rd August 1919. From the copy produced and from the evidence it appears that it was not signed by Sadal Khan but that it bore his thumb-impression. Sadal Khan died according to the plaintiff-appellant on the 27th August 1919 and according to the defendants-respondents on the 2nd September 1919. There is no finding of the Courts as to when he died. He was a very old man of over 80. He was suffering from a carbuncle. According to the evidence of Mumtaz Khan, Hakim, which Mr. K. C. Banerji believes, Sadal Khan was delirious some days before his death. The point which I have to decide is whether, on the finding of Mr. Banerji, the deed is invalid under the doctrine of Marzu-ul-maut. Sadal Khan was certainly suffering at the time from a disease which was the immediate cause of his death. The disease was such as to incapacitate him from the pursuit of his ordinary vocation or standing up for prayers. In a man of his advanced age such an illness was always likely to end fatally and it is impossible to conceive that such a possibility would not have been present to his mind. The presence of a carbuncle is always dangerous even in a middle-aged man of robust health and is occasionally fatal, and a carbuncle is very frequently the cause of death in the aged. Any Indian of advanced years would know this and would be apprehensive when suffering from such an ailment as to its possible consequences. Applying the principles that were laid down in Hasrat Bibi v. Ghulam Jafar (1), the disease from which Sadal Khan was suffering undoubtedly came within the category of a Marzu-ul-maut illness. I, therefore, accept the findings of Mr. Banerji and upon these findings I allow the appeal. I restore the decision of the learned Munsif setting aside the decision of the District Judge. The defendants Qudratullah and Amanullah will pay their costs and those of the appellant in all Courts. These costs will include in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) ss. 96, 97—Preliminary and final decrees—Appeal against preliminary decree—Final decree passed after filing of appeal—Procedure.

Where the dates of a preliminary decree and a final decree permit an appellant to challenge both decrees within the time allowed by law, it is unreasonable to allow him to avoid the provisions of the Court-Fees Act and to obtain a reversal of the final decree by a circuitous method by appealing against the preliminary decree only, when the direct method is open. In such a case the proper course is to allow the appellant a reasonable time within which to amend his appeal. [p. 980, Col. 2.]

Where, however, an appeal against the preliminary decree is filed before the final decree is made and the dates of the two decrees do not allow an appeal against both being filed, the subsequent passing of the final decree would not render the appeal against the preliminary decree nugatory, and the final decree would depend on the preliminary decree and if the latter is set aside the former would fall with it. Case-law discussed.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioner, dated the 12th April, 1920.

Mr. F. Castolline, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tahirram Maniram, for the Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—Two Muhammadan sisters, Amnat and Fatma, in the year 1918 filed a suit in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Sind against six defendants, Halima, Kama, Hajoo, Haji Muso, Aloo and Ishak, praying that their one-sixth share in certain property in the Lyari quarter, Karachi, might be partitioned and given to them.

ISHAK v. FATMA

For greater clearness the following genealogical table is here inserted showing the names and relationship of the parties :—

The second and sixth defendants, Halima and Ishak, who is the appellant, in their written statements denied that plaintiffs were the descendants of Siyar to whom the plot originally belonged and alleged that they had been in adverse possession since the death of Issa, the father of Halima, who had been in possession before them. They further alleged that the suit was time barred. In February 1919 the first defendant, Kama, died. On the 26th March an application was made to join Hajoo, the 3rd defendant, as her heir and legal representative and a notice was ordered to issue to Hajoo. On the 7th May 1919 Halima, the second defendant, died. On the 10th May an application was made to join Haji Muso as her heir and legal representative and a notice was ordered to issue to Haji Muso. On the 31st October 1919 the first plaintiff died. On the 12th November an application was made by the second plaintiff to join herself and Haji Muso as her heirs and legal representatives and they were brought on the record without any notice issuing. On the 12th April 1920 the learned Additional Judicial Commissioner gave a preliminary decree for partition by metes and bounds of one-sixth share in the plaint property. In his judgment he mentioned that of the line of Ismail only Hajoo the third defendant was left and that he was absent, that of the line of Ishak the second plaintiff had died, Haji Muso and Ishak the fourth and sixth defendants were absent and that Aloo the fifth defendant had no objection to the claim.

Against this judgment and decree the sixth defendant has appealed on 26th July 1920. On the appeal being called on two preliminary objections were raised by the respondent, namely, that the appeal was time barred and, secondly, that no appeal having been filed against the final decree made on 9th August 1920 an appeal against the preliminary decree must also fail.

With regard to the first of these objections the record shows that copies were applied for on 30th June 1920, on the 14th July this office sent for expenses, that is to say, the applicant was informed what the cost of preparing the copies would be and required to pay them. Expenses were paid on the following day and the copies were ready on 17th July. Under section 12 of the Limitation Act, 1908, the 17 days requisite for obtaining copies must be excluded in computing the period of limitation. The appeal is, therefore, clearly within time.

With regard to the second objection, it was held by the Allahabad High Court in Kuria Mal v. Bishambhar Das (1) that, after the passing of the final decree in a suit for partition, no appeal would lie which did not challenge the final as well as the preliminary decree. The Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Piggott there followed a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (2), in which the principle was laid down that just as the right of appeal from interlocutory orders ceases with disposal of the suit the right of appeal from a preliminary decree ceases on the passing of a final decree. Their decision, however, was distinguished and impliedly dissented from in Mohamad Akhtar Husain Khan v. Tasaduk Husain (3), where the necessity of appealing against a final decree, merely to keep alive an appeal against a preliminary decree was questioned, and it was overruled by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Khunaiya Lal v. Tirbeni Sahai (4) which followed Mohamad Akhtar Husain Khan v. Tasaduk Husain (3) and a ruling of the Madras High Court in Lakshmi v. Maru Devi (5) and affirmed the principle that, when an appeal has once been filed and is pending against the preliminary decree in a suit for partition the passing of a final decree does not render the appeal nugatory. The final decree depends on the preliminary decree and if, as the result of an appeal, the latter is set aside the former must fall with it. See also Ram Nath Singh v. Basanta Narain Singh (6) and Atul Chandra Singh v. Kunja Behari Singh (7), Lakshmi v. Maru Devi (5) was followed by a later decision of the Madras High Court in Ramuviyan v. Veerappudayan (8), in which it was held that it is competent to a party to prefer an appeal against the preliminary decree in a redemption suit though, before the appeal is presented, the final decree has been passed. On the other hand, the Calcutta High Court in Kulada Prasad Chowdhury v. Ramananda Pattanark (9), following Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (2), held that where after the passing of the final decree a party appealed from the preliminary decree but did not also appeal from the final decree the appeal from the preliminary decree was incompetent. Mackenzie v. Narsingh Sahai (2), was also followed in Abdul Jalil v. Amar Chand Paul (10) and by Mr. Justice Broadway of the Lahore High Court in Ganula Ram v. Sunder Lal (11), where it was held that after a final decree has been made, whether or not an appeal has been preferred against the preliminary decree, it is the duty of the party aggrieved by the final decree to prefer an appeal against the final decree and an appeal, therefore, against the preliminary decree without challenging the final decree cannot be entertained.

We agree with the view expressed by the Bombay High Court in Dattabraya Ramchandra Savale v. Ajmuddin (12), and Balwant Singh Ramchandra v. Sakharam Manchiram (13) that, where there has been a preliminary decree and a final decree and the dates permitted the appellants to challenge both the preliminary decree and the final decree within the time allowed by law it is unreasonable to allow the appellant to avoid the provisions of the Court-Fees Act and obtain a reversal of the final decree by a circuitous method when the direct method was open, and that the proper course is to allow the appellant a reasonable time within which to amend his appeal.

In the present case the appeal against the preliminary decree was filed before the final decree was made and the dates did not allow of an appeal against both the preliminary decree and the final decree. We agree with the view expressed in Khunaiya Lal v. Tirbeni Sahai (4), Ram Nath Singh v. Basanta Narain Singh (6) Atul Chandra Singh v. Kunja Behari Singh (7), that the subsequent passing of the final decree did not render the appeal against the preliminary decree nugatory but that the final decree depended on the preliminary decree and if the latter was set aside the former would fall with it.

In the circumstances, it is necessary to consider the appeal on the merits. In this connection, Mr. Castellino contends, and I think correctly, that the heir and legal representative of Kama was not Hajoo, the third defendant, but Halima, the second defendant, since Halima was the daughter of Kama's paternal uncle Issa, while Hajoo was the daughter of Kama's paternal aunt Nuran. He further contends, and I think rightly, that the heir and legal representative of Halima was not Haji Muso the fourth defendant but Hajoo the third defendant. Since Hajoo was the son of Halima's paternal aunt while Halima was the second cousin once removed of Haji Muso. Similarly, we think that Mr. Castellino correctly contends that the heir and legal representative of the deceased plaintiff Amnat was the second plaintiff Fatma, her sister, and not Fatma and Haji Muso, since Fatma was entitled as a sharer and as a residuary to the whole of Amnat's estate. With regard to the irregularity in joining Hajoo instead of Halima as the heir and legal representative of Kama and Haji Muso as the heir and legal representatives of Halima instead of Hajoo, the record shows that Halima and Hajoo were already on the record in their personal capacities. Hajoo was evidently not contesting the plaintiffs' claim for he absented himself at the hearing. Ishak, the appellant, was not the heir and he was not affected. The irregularity does not appear to us to have affected the merits of the case and it was, in our opinion, cured by section 99 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is next contended on behalf of the appellant that since notices were not issued to himself and several of the other parties when the heirs and legal representatives of Kama and Halima purported to be joined and since no notices were issued when the heirs and legal representatives of the first plaintiff were joined the subsequent proceedings were void. There is no provision, however, in the Code of Civil Procedure making it obligatory in the Court to issue a notice. This appears to us a matter for the Court's discretion. Lastly, it was contended that the appellant was prevented from attendance at the hearing owing to the date of hearing being altered in consequence of an interlocutory application of which no notice was given to the appellant. Had this been a bona fide contention we are of opinion that the appellant would have taken steps to apply, under O. IX, r. 13, for the setting aside of the ex parte decree, but no such application was made. The reason alleged for the omission to apply under O. IX, r. 13 is that the appellant became aware of the ex parte decree after the expiry of the time for applying to set it aside but there appears to us no force in this argument since the application could, under the provisions of section 5 of the Indian Limitation Act, have been admitted after the period of limitation had expired on sufficient cause being shown. It was nowhere specifically stated that the appellant attended on the adjourned date, the suit was not called out and that appellant was unable to ascertain the date of hearing and, for the purpose of the appeal, steps were not even taken to get the orders relating to the dates of hearing typed and embodied in the Paper-Book.

Appellants brother, Aloo, attended at the hearing though he was not served with any notice. We are of opinion that it is not established that appellants absence at the hearing was due to his having been misled or to his having been prevented by want of notice from ascertaining the date. Taking all the circumstances into consideration, we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. Gupta and T. S. Sheorey, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree will explain the relationship of plaintiff No. 1 with one Beersa, the last male-holder of the property in suit, on the basis of which he claims the property as Beersa's sister's son.

Beersa left at his death a large estate consisting of both moveable and immoveable property including seven malguzari villages. That property is in the possession of Mt. Halki, the defendant, from the date of Beersa's death which took place on 4th March 1907. The plaintiff says Mt. Halki is not the lawfully wedded wife of Beersa but was a mistress in his keeping and as such was not entitled to the property. Plaintiff No. 1, therefore, claims that he became owner of that property by inheritance to Beersa, the defendant being a trespasser. This suit was instituted two months and 16 days before the expiry of 12 years from 4th March 1907 when the cause of action arose. The plaintiff No. 1 having no funds of his own has, by means of a registered sale-deed dated 10th October 1918, Exhibit P-1, sold portion of the property which is the subject of the dispute to plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 in consideration of their undertaking to finance the present litigation. The defendant Mt. Halki being a trespasser, plaintiffs sue to eject her, and in the alternative, pray that if it be held that she was a married wife of Beersa, plaintiff No. 1's rights as next reversioner may be declared and Mt. Halki restrained from committing waste in respect of the property in her possession.

Mt. Halki's defence is that she was married wife to Beersa in Kari form of marriage and as such succeeded to his estate on his death. She also challenged the plaintiff No. 1's relationship with Beersa and denied that plaintiff No. 1's mother Mt. Chitia was born of Bhagwandas. It was alleged that she was born of her mother by another husband before her mother was married to Bhagwandas and that as she lived with Bhagwandas after her mother's marriage with him she was looked upon as sister of Beersa and, in that sense, Beersa was maternal uncle of plaintiff No. 1. These two points formed the subject of issues Nos. 3 and 4:—

"3. Is the plaintiff Jumilal the son of Beersa's sister?"

"4. Is Mt. Halki, defendant, the widow of Beersa having been married to him by kari form?"

The lower Court, in a long and elaborate judgment, has come to a finding on issue No. 4 that Mt. Halki was lawfully married to and is the widow of Beersa. In view of this finding the Court below thought it unnecessary to record any finding on issue No. 3 and has dismissed the suit of all the three plaintiffs with costs. Against this dismissal plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 alone appealed. Plaintiff No. 3, Beharilal, was not joined even as co-respondent when the appeal was filed on 2nd April 1921. Beharilal presented an application on 6th April 1923 to be joined as an appellant on the ground that he is interested in the result of the appeal. This application was rejected on the ground that any appeal by him or at his instance on 6th

April 1923 would have been barred by limitation. During the pendency of this appeal the appellant No. 2, Manoolal, died on 28th January 1923 and his widow Jawahar Dulaiya alias Saraswati was, on her application, brought on record as the legal representative of the deceased appellant.

The pleadings gave rise to some other issues also. The question of limitation as regards recovery of moveable property has been decided against the plaintiffs. Similarly, the question of the alleged waste by Beersa has also been decided against the plaintiffs. The question of limitation for recovery of moveables is not raised, the one about the waste though taken up as a ground is not pressed. Grounds Nos. 1 and 6 deal with the question of Halki's status and ground No. 8 with the omission to decide issue No. 3. The only two points, therefore, pressed before us are (1) that Mt. Halki has failed to prove that she was the married wife of Beersa, and (2) that issue No. 3 which affected the plaintiff's right of suit should not have been left undecided but that the decision on it should be in plaintiff's favour. This being primarily a suit in ejectment it would have been proper for the lower Court, first, to take up the question of the plaintiffs' right to sue and then, if necessary, decide the question of defendant's status. For the purpose of this appeal we think we can, for the sake of argument, safely assume that plaintiff No. 1 was the sister's son of Beersa and proceed to examine the correctness of the lower Court's finding on issue No. 4. We are fully alive to the circumstance that Mr. Ally Raza who decided the case was not the Judge who heard the evidence and he was not, therefore, in a better position than ourselves in judging of the oral testimony adduced in the case.

The appellants complain that the lower Court has wrongly drawn certain inferences adverse to the plaintiffs from the fact of the delay in filing this suit. The interval between the date of death of Beersa and the filing of the suit is 11 years, 9 months and 14 days and another 2 months and 16 days would have put the claim beyond time. They also complain that plaintiff No. 1's conduct after Beersa's death in connection with certain previous litigation between defendant Halki and himself and certain admissions, have been improperly construed and erroneous inferences have been drawn therefrom and, further, that certain facts which had an important bearing on the status of Mt. Halki have been ignored by the Court below with the result that the decision has gone wrong on the point of defendant's status. The question of delay is so mixed up with the question of plaintiff's conduct that we think that we should take up the two questions together. We shall at the outset set out certain undeniable facts which are patent on the face of the record.

On plaintiff's own admission the defendant was a relation of Beersa's former wife and was looking after him and his household and actually lived with him for over two years prior to his death. Further, she was successful in securing mutation of names in her own favour in respect of the several malguzari villages in place of the deceased whom she called her husband. These mutation proceedings were started upon a petition dated 16th April 1907 by Mt. Halki describing herself as the widow of the deceased Beersa, (Exhibit P-6). This petition was made through Mr. Jeewan Chander Mukerjee, Advocate (P. W. 1). The plaintiff No. 1 had in those proceedings denied her status as the widow of Beersa and contested her right to have the mutation in her own name; but he was unsuccessful as the report dated 20th December 1907 (Exhibit D-5) and the order dated 7th January 1908 (Exhibit D-6) show. Mt. Halki collected the rents and managed the villages and paid revenue into the Government Treasury and also established by evidence the fact of her marriage in kari form with Beersa, and succeeded in defeating the objections of the present plaintiff No. 1 against her name being mutated in the Revenue Records. Early in 1908 she made an application, dated 20th February 1908, (Exhibit P-8) for succession certificate being 'granted to her for debts and securities amounting to Rs. 10,527 and succeeded, in spite of plaintiff's opposition, in getting it. In assertion of her own right to present possession as widow of Beersa she remained in peaceful enjoyment of the whole of the property including the moveables belonging to the deceased and appropriated the whole of the income derived therefrom to herself practically unmolested by any of the rival claimants all these 11 years. We cannot ignore these things which clearly prove long silence and inaction on the part of the plaintiff No. 1. This is not all. Mt. Halki, in fact, sued plaintiff No. 1 for arrears of rent (Civil Suit No. 384 of 1908, Exhibit D-4) and for possession of a portion of a house (Civil Suit No. 67 of 1915, Exhibit D-8) in her capacity of the widow and heiress of the late Beersa and obtained decrees in both the suits. Further, she got from him some property in consideration of her giving him a discharge from liability for certain arrears of rent in 1910 by means of a registered sale-deed dated 12th December 1910 (Exhibit D-9), wherein he admittedly described her as the widow of Beersa.

It will be seen that in the Revenue as also in the Civil proceedings in which plaintiff No. 1 and defendant figured as parties the latter was always successful as against the former. It passes one's comprehension to find that a person like plaintiff No. 1 who denied defendant's rights to the property of Beersa and claimed for himself the position of the proprietor and landlord of the villages should meekly submit to the humble position of a mere tenant in the villages, and seek a settlement of his liabilities as such tenant with a person who, to his knowledge, had absolutely no right thereto. Again, why should he submit to a decree for possession of a house being passed against him and in favour of Halki in 1915 if he was the owner thereof. Between the years 1907 and 1912 Mt. Halki had employed one agent who had misappropriated or, at any rate, had not duly accounted to her for the property he used to look after in his capacity as her agent. This was really an inroad on his title and on the right of enjoyment of the property which he claimed as his own. Why does the plaintiff No. 1 sleep over his rights, and stand by and suffer heavy losses in this manner, if he regarded himself as the owner of the whole of the inheritance and Mt. Halki was nobody? It was the defendant who, on 24th September 1912, started an expensive litigation against the said agent Karanju. From the nature of the claim, as we gather from Exhibits P-4 and P-9, it appears that she had entrusted her agent with properties worth Rs. 33,250 including ornaments, cash and other moveables. She sought to recover back all her property and asked for an account of the 6 years village profits that came to his hand for the period of agency which came into existence on 22nd April 1907 and she succeeded in obtaining a decree on 3rd March 1915 for Rs. 11,477-10-0 which was confirmed in First Appeal No. 39 of 1915 on 30th October 1915 by this Court (Exhibit P-3). Every moment he was losing property, as also the profits accruing therefrom, and the moveables were practically vanishing. The malguzari villages were apparently very valuable. The assessment of land revenue paid out of collections during the agent's 6 years management itself came to Rs. 8,655-11-5 + Rs. 3,947-12-0, total Rs. 12,603-7-5, i. e., a little over Rs. 2,000, a year as Exhibit D-1 which is a certified copy of the judgment in First Appeal No. 39 of 1915 of this Court would show. Batten and Stanyon, A. J. Cs., observed towards the end of their judgment as follows: "the learned Judge has fixed Rs. 2,950 in round numbers as the profits for the six years. Having regard to the revenue paid by the plaintiff during these years, namely, Rs. 12,605-7-5, it may safely be inferred that this finding involves a loss to the plaintiff and a dishonest gain to the defendant (agent) of not less than Rs. 10,000 and that he has got off extremely lightly. It is posteriorious to suppose that seven village shares during years of average agricultural conditions in respect of which the revenue paid was over Rs. 2,000 per annum, only yielded a net profit of less than Rs. 500 per annum." This by itself shows that the plaintiff No. 1, unless he was convinced as to the untruth of his own allegations, would not have sat quiet and allowed himself to be robbed so largely by the defendant and her unscrupulous agent. The excuse advanced for explaining away the irresistible adverse inference deducible from his inaction, is that the plaintiff could not command sufficient funds for such a big and expensive litigation. But plaintiff No. 1 dare not go into the box to give it. It is an explanation given at the bar before us. He dragged the defendant into the box but was himself afraid of entering it. This clearly shows the weakness of the plaintiff's case and he thought it safer to be out of the box than get his own case damned by his own testimony. We are not prepared to accept the explanation offered at the bar under such circumstances, and we think the lower Court was perfectly justified in drawing adverse inferences against the plaintiff from these and other undeniable facts.

It is ingenuously argued that the judgments and orders in the mutation case, the succession certificate case, the rent suits, as also in the suit for possession of a portion of a house, are not admissible in evidence. We fail to see why they should be held inadmissible to prove the fact and nature of the litigation and its result. In our opinion, they all show the recognition of defendant's status as Beersa's widow; see Sakharam v. Shriram (1) and, as pointed out in Lakshman v. Amrit (2) and Neamut Ali v. Gooroo Dass (3), they are of high evidentiary value, and in any case constitute proof sufficient to shift the burden. If we look to the stand which the present plaintiff No. 1 had taken in the mutation proceedings we are surprised to see to what degree of falsity that man had gone to secure his own end. We have it from the report, Exhibit D-5, dated 20th December 1907, in the mutation proceedings that the present plaintiff had then laid claim to a part of the property under an oral gift to himself from Beersa and another portion for his daughter, and to a third portion as a Wahawatdar of a temple, and his father (Ghashete) had the effrontery to depose that Beersa had taken Jumilal away with him 12 years before his deposition and kept him with himself with a view to make him the owner of the estate presumably by adopting him. The more we think of these facts the more do we get convinced of the falsity of the plaintiff's insinuation that defendant was not the lawfully wedded wife of Beersa. All this delay and long silence and inaction clearly amount to acquiescence on the part of plaintiff No. 1 in the right of Mt. Halki to lawfully enjoy the whole of Beersa's estate as his widow.

The oral evidence about the celebration of marriage of Beersa with the defendant is bound to be discrepant after this long length of time, and, standing by itself, no one would accept it and we think the Subordinate Judge was perfectly right in not attaching much importance to it. But, judged in the light of the documentary evidence and of the undeniable facts, we think the oral testimony gains in weight and clearly supports the defendant's status, as Beersa's lawfully wedded wife during his lifetime, and, further, as his widow legally entitled, after his death, to succeed to the whole of his estate. The oral evidence adduced by the defendant in support of her status as Beersa's wife is both direct as well as circumstantial. It consists partly of the testimony of persons who have actually attended the marriage and the feast given by Beersa in connection with the marriage and partly of the recognition and the treatment the married couple received in their society after the alliance and the reputation Mt. Halki enjoyed as the wife of Beersa. The marriage was not got through secretly but the evidence shows it was performed with great pomp and publicity befitting Beersa's position. It is argued that Beersa's own leprous condition of health, as also his old age, were factors which favoured the plaintiff's contention that a young woman like Mt. Halki would very likely be willing to live as a mistress rather than as a wife of Beersa. We rather think that these conditions would themselves be a very good temptation to an ambitious or adventurous woman like the defendant to get herself married to an old and helpless man only to smoothly pave her way to the whole of the inheritance to which she as a kept mistress could lay no pretensions after the man's death. We are not, however, prepared to hold that the plaintiff has very satisfactorily established that, when Beersa performed his marriage by kari form with the defendant, he suffered from leprosy of a virulent type as alleged. There is ample evidence to the contrary and we need only refer to the evidence of D. W. 1, D. W. 2, D. W. 3, D. W. 4, D. W. 9 and D. W. 17. That Beersa and Halki lived as husband and wife and they were both in caste and were not excluded from their social and other functions of the community is amply borne out by the evidence of defendant's witnesses Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 9.

It is next argued that the Court below has not taken into consideration the evidence on record which tends to prove that Halki was of bad character and Beersa, who was a respectable man, would not give shelter to a woman who was kept by a Muhammadan. Our attention is drawn to the evidence of P. W. 4, P.

W. 5 and P. W. 8 in this connection, and we are asked to accept it as pointing to the greater likelihood of her having in all probability preferred to live with Beersa as his mistress rather than as his lawfully wedded wife. We have read through the evidence carefully and we have no hesitation in at once discarding it as totally false and unreliable. The witnesses are men of no status practically, and we do not attach any value to their concocted evidence. Added to this, we have the declarations and conduct of plaintiff No. 1 himself all these 11 or 12 years which very clearly establish that he regarded and dealt with her as the lawfully wedded wife of Beersa Patel. The description of defendant Halki as the widow (Bewa) of Beersa by plaintiff No. 1 himself in the sale-deed dated, 12th December 1910, Exhibit D-9, which he executed in favour of defendant contains a clear admission on plaintiff's part of her status as the lawfully wedded wife of Beersa : see Sakharam v. Shriram (1). It is contended that it was a loose expression and no presumption can, therefore, be based thereon. We cannot belittle the importance of such an admission particularly when we remember that the plaintiff No. 1 had repudiated that status of the defendant on previous occasions and he would, therefore, be the last person to make such an admission if he had a mind to establish his own title to the property of Beersa as against the rival claim of the defendant. No doubt, an admission operates merely to shift the onus and raises only a rebuttable presumption. We consider that the evidence adduced by the plaintiff even taken as a whole does not rebut the presumption. Most of the evidence is of a partisan character and no weight can, therefore, be attached to it. After taking into consideration the whole of the evidence both oral and documentary and the probabilities of the case we hold, concurrently with the lower Court, that the defendant's status as the lawfully wedded wife of late Beersa is amply established and the plaintiffs have failed to establish the contrary.

The necessary result of this finding is that, in the absence of any issue of Beersa, the defendant as his widow was legally held entitled to succeed to his estate and that the plaintiffs' primary claim for recovery of possession of the property, therefore, fails.

MUNNA v. SUKLAL

The alternative claim for a declaration that plaintiff No. 1 is the sister's son of Beersa and as such his next reversionary heir after the death of Mt. Halki needs no adjudication in view of the decision of the first Court on the question of waste alleged to have been committed by the defendant not having been challenged before us. In Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Ayer (4) it was urged before their Lordships of the Privy Council that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that he was the next presumptive reversioner because his claim to be such had been disputed. It was held that the Courts in India having held that the case of waste was not established and the plaintiff having thus failed to make good the main heads of his complaint no such declaration ought to be granted to him. The relief of declaration is more or less a discretionary relief, and the Courts are not ordinarily prepared to grant such reliefs where it would be only by way of anticipation or where the main heads of the plaintiff's complaints have failed. For these reasons we do not think it necessary to give any finding on the point covered by issue No. 3, or to give any declaration as prayed for. If any finding be deemed necessary we are prepared to hold on the oral evidence coupled with the defendant's own admissions contained in the pleadings in the previous Civil and Revenue litigation that plaintiff No. 1 is the sister's son of Beersa and as such is a reversionary heir to his estate. We may simply refer to the admissions contained in clause (c) of the verified petition dated 20th February 1908 exhibit P-8 in the succession certificate case, and also to the admission made on 7th July 1915 in the suit brought by her for possession of the house (Exhibit P-2) in support of our view.

The result is that we confirm the dismissal of the plaintiffs' claim and dismiss the appeal with costs to be borne and paid by the appellants in both the Courts.

Article 14 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to acts and orders done in the exercise of powers legally exercisable by the Executive, and can only be applied where the order is one which needs to be set aside. If in fact there is no provision of law for setting it aside, the Article cannot apply. [p. 990, col. 1.]

Though an order in a mutation case directing mutation in the name of a particular person cannot be directly impugned in a civil suit, yet another person can show by a civil suit that he is the real owner of the property mutated, and, having established his claim in that suit can then go to the Revenue authorities and ask that mutation be made in his name. Article 14 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act is not applicable to such a suit. [p. 990, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—The following genealogical tree helps to explain the present suit :—

Hiru died on 1st May 1911. In Civil Suit No. 44 of 1917, a suit brought by mortgagees, the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 1's husband Shrawan were on the same side as defendants, and in that case the alleged relationship of the plaintiff with Hiru was found established and Shrawan's allegation that he was the adopted son of Asaram was held not proved. The present case is brought by plaintiffs for possession of a malik makbuza field No. 31 of mouza Walni, tahsil Saoner, as the heir of Hiru.

The defendants denied the claim. They questioned the correctness of the genealogical tree filed by the plaintiff; they denied the right of plaintiffs Nos. 2 to 4 to sue; and denied the right of the plaintiffs to inherit the field and stated that Shrawan inherited it as the adopted son of Asaram. They further denied that the decision in the former suit on the question of adoption and relationship of the plaintiffs is res judicata, and contended that Gumai shown as the father of Sukhlal in the tree was not the son of Gady Patel but was the son of one Bhoja, the former husband of Gady Patel's pat-wife, and that Hari and Gumani were half-brothers through their mother and not through their father. It was further contended that the plaintiffs were estopped from denying the title of Shrawan, that the defendants improved the field at their own cost and that possession could not be given unless they reimbursed the same: Limitation was also pleaded and they contended that the plaintiffs' suit to set aside the adoption was not in time. It was also stated that, shortly after Hiru's death, there was an arrangement between Sukhlal, plaintiff No. 1, and Shrawan, by which Shrawan was allowed to retain the field in suit along with other property, and that plaintiffs were now estopped from laying any claim to the estate in dispute.

Plaintiffs in reply denied the allegations and the lower Court's findings may be summarised as follows. The question as regards Shrawan's alleged adoption and plaintiffs' relationship to Hiru was found res judicata on account of the decision in suit No. 44 of 1917, a decision affirmed in appeal. It was held that plaintiff No. 1 did depose in Civil Suit No. 53 of 1914 that Shrawan was the adopted son of Asaram and that he did not do so in the mutation case. Mutation was not effected on the basis of the statement of plaintiff No. 1. The two wells in the field in dispute dated from the time of Hiru. The garden in dispute is now in possession of a Receiver appointed by the Court, and the number of trees as counted when it was placed in his possession, including the orange trees is found to be 340, 300 being orange trees and 40 of other kinds. Shrawan made no improvements and the existing plants, wells and dikes were at the time of Hiru. In any case, the expenditure incurred by the defendants in the shape of manure, bullocks, watering, digging, clearing the ground and raising its level has been paid off by the fruit of the trees in the garden for the years preceding the three years for which plaintiffs may claim profits. Dealing with the question of estoppel, the Judge of the lower Court writes:—

"Any representation by the plaintiffs by their conduct or acquiescence to the effect that Shrawan was the adopted son could not have caused any belief of the fact in the mind of the latter as he knew very well if he was the adopted son or not. But what action was intended? What action of Shrawan was the result or was caused by the representation? What is there to show that he believed the representation to be true and acted upon it? I do not see how there is any estoppel. I thus hold that the plaintiffs are not estopped nor barred, . . ."

As regards the question of limitation the Judge thinks that the finding that Shrawan is not the adopted son of Asaram is res judicata between the parties and the adoption cannot be pleaded for the purposes of limitation. The question of having the adoption set aside does not arise. In the present case the claim for possession is governed by 12 years. Hiru died within 12 years of the suit, and the claim is thus within time. As to the family arrangement, the Judge held that the evidence is insufficient to support the plea raised, and that the dispute settled by an arrangement come to related to the five fields of Mst. Thama, widow of Kashinath, son of Ganesh, and another brother of Hiru. Plaintiffs were given a decree and against that decree the present appeal has been filed.

The first question argued is, whether the lower Court's finding as to the question of adoption and plaintiffs' relationship to Hiru being res judicata is correct. It only requires a perusal of the judgment in Civil Suit No. 44 of 1917 and of the judgment of this Court in appeal to see that both questions are res judicata. It was absolutely essential for the determination of that suit to decide these questions inter se between the defendants. They had to be decided and they were decided, and, as regards the present plaintiffs and the representatives of Shrawan, are binding. I have no doubt that the lower Court's decision on this question is correct.

The learned Pleader for the appellants divides his remaining arguments into four parts: (a) limitation, (b) family arrangement, (c) estoppel, and (d) the costs of improvements. As regards the limitation, there seems to me absolutely no force in the arguments advanced. It is contended that under Article 118 of the Limitation Act six years is the time within which to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid or never, in fact, took place, and that plaintiffs having failed within that period to obtain this declaration are now debarred from contesting the alleged adoption. But it seems that the High Courts in India, except that of Bombay, hold that a suit for possession like the present is not subject to the limitation prescribed by Articles 118 and 119 even though the defendant is in possession under an adoption or the plaintiffs' title is based upon an adoption. The Articles apply only to a suit for declaratory relief pure and simple and not to a suit for possession. The rulings of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tribhuwan Bhadur Singh v. Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (1) and Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan (2) affirm the principle above referred to.

It is further contended that Article 14 of the Limitation Act precludes the present suit, but that Article applies to acts or orders done in the exercise of powers legally exercisable by the Executive, and before it can be applied the order must be one which needs to be set aside. If, in fact, there is no provision of law for setting it aside, Article 14 cannot apply. It is clear that though an order in a mutation case directing mutation in the name of a particular person cannot be directly impugned in a civil suit, yet another person can show by a civil suit that he is the real owner of the property mutated, and having established his claim in that suit can then go to the Revenue authorities and ask that mutation be made in his name. The argument based on Article 14 of the Limitation Act is futile.

I now come to the question of family arrangement. The Judge of the lower Court has discussed this in paragraph 15 of his judgment. The evidence for the present appellants has been very carefully scrutinized. D. W. 2 Mahadeo says that in his presence Thama made no arrangement in regard to her lands and that no panchayat was held in regard to them. The witness had given evidence for Shrawan in three previous cases. D. W. 3's evidence is apparently hearsay. He states that Thama gave one field called Kharda to Shrawan. D. W. 4 speaks of a panchayat at which it was settled that the first plaintiff No. 1 should take the estate of Thama and that Shrawan should take the estate of Asaram. He also speaks to there being a panchayat, therefore, contradicting the two previous witnesses. He has also given evidence three or four times for Shrawan. D. W. 6 Dhondba says that Mst. Thama had four or five fields and that Shrawan cultivated one of them, and also that plaintiff No. 1 cultivated the others. He speaks to a panchayat being held where it was settled that Shrawan should take the estate of Thama. He further states that Shrawan got one field of hers and that plaintiff No. 1 and Shrawan agreed to this arrangement. From his cross-examination it appears that the panchayat held was about Mst. Thama's estate. D. W. 7 apparently knows nothing about the matter. The evidence of D. W. 13 goes to show that there was a settlement as regards the lands of Thama, while D. W. 14 speaks to both Thama's and Hiru's fields being in dispute. D. W. 17 speaks about the settlement which seems to have been about Thama's lands.

Reliance is placed on the evidence of witness No. 2 for the plaintiffs. He does not say that any settlement was come to as regards Hiru's lands. I think that the decision of the lower Court that the dispute relating to the fields of Mst. Thama is correct, that she gave one field called Kharda to Shrawan and her remaining four fields were to be taken by Sukhlal, that there was no dispute as regards Hiru's fields or the field in dispute, and that plaintiff No. 1 believed that Shrawan was the adopted son of Asaram and also that it was not until the time of his evidence in suit No. 44 of 1917 that he awoke to the fact that the alleged adoption of Shrawan could be successfully impeached.

As to the improvements the costs of which are claimed by the appellants from the plaintiffs, reliance is placed on Exhibit P-25, kharsa for the year 1908-08 and Exhibit P-6, kharsa for the year 1914-15, showing increase in the number of trees. But it seems to me that Shrawan must all along have known that he was not the adopted son of Hiru, and as such had no valid title to the field in suit. And if he then plants trees on another person's land, he cannot, in my opinion, demand compensation for the loss. The two wells were in existence at the time of Hiru and Shrawan and his heirs must have recouped the expense of planting from the usufruct of the trees. Most of the defendants' witnesses do speak to the planting of trees and to money spent on the improvement of the garden though they naturally can give no very accurate estimate of the sums thus expended. As Shrawan lived with Hiru it is more than possible that many of the improvements deposed to were done in the lifetime of that person. I do not think that the appellants are entitled to any money on account of the alleged improvement.

Now, as to the question of whether there has been any estoppel and whether by any act of Sukhlal's, Shrawan or his successors have acted to their own prejudice. Shrawan must have known that he was not the adopted son to Hiru, and I do not think that, because he may have improved the garden, it can be said that he did so because Sukhlal led him to believe that the field was his. Shrawan had lived for many years with Hiru and was looking after the property of the latter and apparently continued to cultivate this field after Hiru's death. But it seems to me that any money he spent on the land has been amply repaid, and that he spent much money entirely at his own risk.

The result is that the appeal fails and it is dismissed with costs. The appellant will pay the respondents' costs.

Punjab Pre-emption (Act I of 1918) s. 8 (2)—Village immoveable property—Village, what is—Machine Mohalla of Jhelum City whether village.

The expression "village" ordinarily connotes an area occupied by a body of men mainly dependent upon agriculture or occupations subservient thereto.

That part of village Pira Ghaib which is included in the Machine Mohalla, has become a part of Jhelum Town and can no longer be regarded as village immoveable property within the meaning of section (2) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act.

Appeal, under section 10 of the Letters Patent, from the decree of Mr. Justice Abdul Raof, passed in Civil Appeal No. 1390 of 1922 on the 26th January 1923, affirming that of the District Judge, Jhelum, dated the 10th March 1922, dismissing the plaintiff's claim with costs in both Courts.

Lala Mool Chand, R. S. for the Appellant.
Malik Barkat Ali, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an action brought for the pre-emption of a plot of land which is entered in the Revenue

Records as a part of the estate called Pira Ghaib. This estate is situate near the town of Jhelum, and it appears that about 3/4ths of its area has been included in the Machine Mohalla which has been held by the Courts below to be a suburb of the Jhelum town.

The question, upon which we are invited to express our opinion, is whether the property in dispute is to be deemed to be village immoveable property as contemplated by the Punjab Pre-emption Act. There can be no doubt that the land now occupied by the Machine Mohalla, including the property in dispute, was at one time a part of the village Pira Ghaib, but the facts found by the Courts below justify the inference that it has ceased to be a part of the village and must now be regarded as urban property. The expression "village" connotes ordinarily an area occupied by a body of men mainly dependent upon agriculture or occupations subservient thereto. Now, the Mohalla in question is within the limits of the Municipality of Jhelum and is occupied by persons who are engaged mainly in commercial pursuits. The reported cases contain many instances of rural areas in the vicinity of a town which have ceased to be rural and have grown into a suburb of the town. Such areas have been held to be governed by rules applying to urban properties.

We accordingly concur in the conclusion of the Single Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs.

recover value of goods—Jurisdiction—Cause of action meaning of.

Plaintiff sent certain bales from a place within the jurisdiction of the Akola Court to defendants in Bombay. The bales were to be sold by the defendants in accordance with instructions to be sent by the plaintiff, and accounts were to be rendered and money was to be paid to the plaintiff at the place of despatch. Plaintiff did not desire the bales to be sold and asked the defendants to return them and on their failure to do so, sued them at Akola for the value of the bales :

Held, that the cause of action arose in part within the jurisdiction of the Akola Court and that Court could, therefore, entertain the suit.

(Case-law referred to.

The expression "cause of action" means the whole bundle of relevant facts which the plaintiff must allege and prove in order to succeed.

Revision against the order of the Second Additional District Judge, Akola, in Civil Suit No. 30 of 1922, dated 27th October 1923.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—The plaintiff is a cotton merchant, residing at Khamgaon, in the Buldana District, while defendants are a firm of adttas or commission agents at Bombay. The plaintiff states that the plaintiff sent 97 bales of ginned cotton to the defendants at Bombay from Khamgaon about May 1920. They were to be sold when the plaintiff would direct the defendants. Order for sale was, however, never given, and, about the 10th of October of 1921, the plaintiff asked the defendants to return to him his bales. Later on a notice was sent to the defendants on the 12th October of the same year. In reply to the notice the defendants informed the plaintiff that they had already sold the bales. The plaintiff, therefore, claims Rs. 14,000 as the value of the bales after deducting Rs. 5,400 for expenses and adat charges and advances made to the plaintiff. The plaintiff further states :—

"As the bales were sent to the defendant from Khamgaon, as it was agreed to render accounts thereof, and to pay money to the plaintiff at Khamgaon, and as such also is the market practice, the cause of action accrued at Khamgaon, within the local limits of this Court's jurisdiction, on 12th October 1921."

The defendants urged inter alia that the suit as laid was not triable in the Akola Court on the grounds that the suit was for damages caused by the non-delivery of the bales, and that the bales having come into the defendants' possession at Bombay where they were entrusted to him, the cause of action accrued at Bombay under section 19 of the Civil Procedure Code. The lower Court has held that as the bales were sent from Khamgaon to be sold according to the plaintiff's instructions, and as accounts were to be rendered by the defendants to the plaintiff, and the money was to be paid to the plaintiff at Khamgaon, the suit has been rightly instituted in the Akola Court. The question before us is whether this suit should be tried at Akola or at Bombay.

It is argued for the applicants that the case is one for damages by wrongful conversion, that the goods were delivered to the applicants in Bombay for sale, and, therefore, the price when sold was payable to the plaintiff at Bombay. It is admitted that after the defendants sold the bales, they sent a copy of the accounts and a cheque for what they considered due to the plaintiff to Khamgaon. The following cases are quoted for the applicants : Saliy Ram v. Chaha Mal (1), Lalta Prasad v. Ram Sarup (2), Manjappa v. Rajagopalachariar (3), Muhammad Shaffi v. Karamat Ali (4), M. V. Rowther v. K. M. M. Rowther (5), Kamisetti Subbiah v. Katha Venkatasawmy, (6), Firm of Asa Ram Kalu Ram v. Firm of Bakshi Ram-Kanhiya Ram (7). Page 889 of the 27th volume of Halsbury's Laws of England is also quoted to show what acts amount to conversion. It is admitted for the applicants that if the money for the bales was payable in Khamgaon, the present suit has been rightly instituted in the Akola Court. Some of the cases quoted for the applicant were under the old Code of Civil Procedure. The present section 20 (c) states that "every suit shall be instituted in a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action, wholly or in part, arises." There is evidence on record called by the plaintiff to show that the Bombay adhis rendered accounts and sent money to their constituents at the places where the latter reside. The present applicants have called no evidence to the contrary. There can be little doubt that the finding that the defendants were bound under the contract to render accounts and pay money at plaintiff's place at Khamgaon is correct. The finding is based on evidence, and it is contended for the non-applicant that this being a Civil Revision, that finding concludes the case. It is not denied that the defendants did render accounts and sent a cheque for what they considered was due to the plaintiff at Khamgaon. The term "cause of action" is not defined in the Code, but various rulings have defined it as the whole bundle of relevant facts plaintiff must allege and prove to enable him to succeed: see Dulichand Chaudhari v. Lalal Kurmi, (8) The following facts give the Akola Court jurisdiction. The cotton was sent for sale from Khamgaon, the instructions how it was to be dealt with proceeded from that place, the defendants were merely the holders of the bales and were to await instructions as to the sale, and in default of sale the defendants were bound to return the bales or their value. The accounts were to be rendered and money to be paid at Khamgaon. Motilal Pratabchand v. Surajmal Joharmal (9) is quoted, and it is stated that it is a settled principle that the debtor has to seek out his creditor and that the agent's liability is a matter of statute, and under section 213 of the Contract Act he is bound to render proper accounts to his principal on demand.

It seems to us that the fact that cotton was sent from Khamgaon and was to be dealt with under instructions from the plaintiff from that place, and the defendants' liability to render accounts and pay money at Khamgaon are sufficient to show that part of the cause of action accrued in the Buldana District, and that the lower Court is right in holding that it can try the case.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1909), O XLVII, r. 1
—Review—Error of Law, whether sufficient ground.

A Court is not competent to review its judgment which is erroneous on a point of law in view of the exposition of law on the subject by a superior tribunal subsequent to the delivery of the judgment sought to be reviewed.

Waghela v. Mashudin, 13 B. 330; 13 Ind. Jur. 391; 7 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 219; Ramlal v. Kalka Prasad, 10 Ind. Cas. 244; 33 A. 566; 8 A. L. J. 581, and Murari Rao v. Bala Vunth Dikshit, 76 Ind. Cas. 342, 46 M. 955, 45 M. L. J. 309; 18 L. W. 363, (1924) A. L. R. (M.) 98; (1923) M. W. N. 761.

Application to review the judgment of the Division Bench in Revision Application No. 13 of 1921, dated the 6th April 1924.

Mr. T. G. Elphinstone, for the Applicant.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case, there was a dispute between the present applicants Salleh Mahomed and the present opponent Nathumal in respect of a consignment of certain bales of newspapers. In consequence of that dispute, parties went to arbitration and the arbitrators having disagreed, the matter was referred to an umpire who published an award, directing Nathumal to pay Rs. 29,000 odd with interest and costs.

Nathumal applied to have this award taken off the file but his application was rejected by a Judge of this Court.

SALLEH MAHOMED UMOR DOSSAL v. NATHUMAL KISSAMAL

The applicant, therefore, made a revisional application to this Court which revisional application was heard by Mr. Kemp and myself, and we, forming the opinion that the umpire had committed an error of law patent on the face of the award, ordered this award to be taken off the file. The present applicant now comes here asking for review, Mr. Kemp having, in the meantime, ceased to be a Judge of this Court.

The sole question for my decision at present is whether any ground is shown for granting the application for review. It may be admitted for the present purposes, that our decision proceeded largely on the same grounds as commended themselves to the High Court of Bombay in Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd., v. Champsey Bhara (1). Those grounds did not commend themselves to their Lordships of the Privy Council and the judgment of the High Court of Bombay was reversed. That judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council was delivered on the 6th of March 1923, Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Baloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd., (1), and at the time we heard the revisional application in question it had not reached India. It may be assumed for present purposes that had that judgment been placed before us at the hearing, our judgment would not have proceeded on the lines on which it did proceed.

The question remains whether that is a circumstance which would justify me in granting review of the order of this Bench.

Now, review can only be granted in three cases (1) when new and important matter or evidence is discovered, (2) on account of some mistake or error apparent on the face of the record and (3) for any other sufficient reason. It is clear to me neither the first nor the second ground exist because it is obvious that discovery by a Judge that he was in error on a point of law would not be a discovery of new and important matter or evidence because the law itself is always the same and the discovery by the Judge subsequent to the delivery of the judgment that his judgment is not in accordance with the true interpretation of the law or any Statute which is in existence cannot be held to be a discovery of new and important matter of evidence. Otherwise, every judgment will be liable to be attacked by a series of applications for review on the ground that the Judge had taken an erroneous view of the law. It would only be necessary to find some authority which had not been quoted at the time of hearing to enable a dissatisfied party to present an application for review. Nor is it possible to suppose that a mistake or error made by a Judge as to the law can be a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record, for the same reason.

The third ground is "for any other sufficient reason" which of course must be a mere general form of the error referred to in the two specified instances given. I have not been able to find any case in which the exposition of the law by a superior tribunal subsequent to the delivery of the judgment objected to has been held to be a sufficient reason except where the two litigations were so closely connected that the judgment of which review is asked for is to all intents and purposes in continuation of the first litigation. Such is the case in Vaghela v. Masludin (2), and Ramlal v. Kalha Parsad (3), is very similar. In this case of course the judgment of the Privy Council is in an entirely different litigation. And it seems to me to admit a review on the ground that their Lordships have expounded the law as to powers of arbitrators in a manner which was contrary to the law as laid down in the authority cited before us would be to open a door to the same objection, namely, the possibility of numerous applications for review which would be the case if it were held that any error by the Judge in respect of law is sufficient to enable the Court to review its own judgment. The parties have their remedy against legal error by the Judge and must have a recourse to that.

The case quoted in Murari Rao v. Balavanth Dikshit (4), is perhaps somewhat in favour of granting a review. But, if I correctly understand the facts of that case, the judgment sought to be reviewed contained an error which, at the time when the judgment was passed, was patently gross and manifest. The learned Judges who delivered the judgment of the High Court themselves laid down clearly enough that a mistake of law is not sufficient ground for granting review, but in that particular case the error of law was of such a type that they did hold its discovery a sufficient reason for granting review. The error in the judgment which I am now asked to review, is not of that type. The law laid down by us may be erroneous but the error was not of the same obvious character as the error referred to in the Madras case, our decision being in accordance with the law then laid down recently by the Bombay High Court to the decisions of which tribunal we always pay extreme respect.

On the whole, I find that this is not a case in which I should grant the review and I, therefore, dismiss this application.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1378 OF 1923.

November 6, 1923.

Present :—Mr. Justice Martineau.POHLO AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—
APPELLANTS*versus*DALIP SINGH—DEFENDANT—
RESPONDENT.Custom—Gift to collateral in presence of nearer collateral—Mutti Jats of Hoshiarpur District.

Among Muti Jats of the Hoshiarpur District a gift of ancestral property in favour of an agnate in the presence of a nearer agnate in consideration of services rendered to the donor is valid by custom.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Hoshiarpur, dated the 16th January 1923, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd class, Hoshiarpur, dated the 21st February 1922, dismissing plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellants.Lalas Madan Gopal and Nanwa Mal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The first defendant, Nihal Singh, adopted the second defendant, Dalip Singh, and made a gift to him of the land that he owned as well as of his occupancy rights in other land. In the present suit the plaintiffs, who are collaterals of Nihal Singh, contend that Dalip Singh is not entitled to succeed to the occupancy rights and that the gift of those rights was invalid. The District Judge has found that Dalip Singh was not formally adopted in the manner prescribed by Hindu Law, but that the adoption was the customary appointment of an heir, and that, therefore, Dalip Singh is not entitled to succeed to the occupancy rights under section 59 of the Tenancy Act; but he holds, in agreement with the first Court, that the gift was made for services rendered by Dalip Singh to Nihal Singh and is, therefore, valid by custom. The suit has, consequently, been dismissed and the plaintiffs have presented a second appeal, having obtained a certificate from the District Judge on the question of custom.

The parties are Mutti Jats of the Hoshiarpur District. Dalip Singh is a collateral of Nihal Singh, one degree more remotely related than the plaintiffs. In Atma Singh v. Nandh Singh (1) it was held that among Dhat Jats of the Hoshiarpur District a gift to an agnate in the presence of a nearer agnate in consideration of services rendered to the donor was valid by custom. The learned Judges remarked in their judgment, after referring to a number of rulings on the point, that the powers of alienation possessed by the Jats of the Hoshiarpur District were extensive, and no evidence has been produced in the present case to show that Jats of the Got to which the parties belong follow customs different from those obtaining among Dhat Jats. Atma Singh v. Nandh Singh (1) appears to be a sufficient authority for holding that the gift by Nihal Singh of his proprietary land was valid, and I agree with the learned District Judge that if Nihal Singh was competent to make a gift of his proprietary land in consideration of the services rendered by Dalip Singh there is no reason why he should not also be competent to make a gift of his occupancy rights.

I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 88, O. XVI, r. 9, O. XLI, r. 1, O. XLVIII, r. 1 (4)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908) ss. 5, 12—Judgment—Decree not drawn up—Duty of Court Appeal—Limitation, commencement of—Appeal, whether can be preferred without decree—Copy, application for, when to be made—Process-fees, order directing immediate payment of, validity of.

The right of appeal, therefore, does not come into play until a proper decree comes into existence. [p. 998, col. 1.]

Where a Court writes a judgment which should be followed by a decree but fails to draw up such decree, the remedy of the party who wants the decree for the purpose of appeal or execution, is to apply for it, and if it is refused, to move the High Court in revision. But until the decree has been drawn there can be neither appeal nor execution. [p. 998, col. 2.]

Where the law creates a limitation and a party is disabled to conform to that limitation without any default in him, and he has no remedy over it, the law will ordinarily excuse him. [p. 998, col. 1.]

There can be no legal obligation on a litigant to apply for a copy of a decree which is non-existent; the existence of a decree is a necessary condition precedent to the accrual of even the right or obligation to apply for a copy. Where a decree is not drawn up within the period of limitation prescribed for preferring an appeal against the decree, the suit must be deemed to be pending up to the date on which the decree is actually drawn up, and limitation for preferring the appeal will commence to run only from that date. [p. 998, col. 1; p. 999, col. 2.]

Case-law discussed.

An order to a party to pay process-fees "at once" militates against both the spirit and the letter of O. XLVIII r. 1 (2) or the Civil Procedure Code. The fixation of time within which to pay process-fees conveys an idea of giving reasonable facilities to a litigant who seeks the help of the Court in the matter of summoning witnesses, to obey the order. This means that the Court with due regard to the provisions of O. XVI, r. 9 of the Code makes terms with the party who requires its help and declares to him that it will try to procure the attendance of witnesses to be summoned for the hearing provided the process-fees are paid within the time fixed by it, and that if he delays such payment he does so at his own risk. To call upon him to pay process-fees at once is virtually to insist on immediate payment of process-fees and to decline to help in the matter of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and in effect to penalise the default by dismissing the suit ultimately. Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Amraoti, in Civil Appeal No. 50 of 1923, dated 21st June 1923.

Mr. N. B. Bobde, for the Appellants.

Mr. D. P. Dwari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises some nice points of law.

- (1) Whether a party aggrieved by a judgment of a subordinate Court not followed by a decree has got a right of appeal, and, if so, when does the limitation prescribed for filing such an appeal, commence to run, does it run even before the decree is actually drawn up in pursuance to a direction of the High Court?
- (2) Whether in the particular case an appeal presented to the District Judge's Court on 16th March 1923 against the decree bearing date 24th August 1921 on which the judgment was pronounced but drawn up and signed on 17th February 1923 could be admitted as not barred by limitation, without the aid of section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1908?
- (3) If not, was there any sufficient cause for excusing the delay?

PANDU v. RAJESHWAR

- (4) Was the first Court right in dismissing the suit for delay on plaintiffs' part to obey an order to pay "process at once?"

A few facts must be briefly stated.

The suit out of which this second appeal arises was instituted on the basis of a mortgage for the recovery of Rs. 1,000 by the grandfather of the minor plaintiffs-respondents on 1st April 1921, in the Court of the Munsif, Yeotmal. The Munsif, after framing certain issues on 27th July 1921, fixed the case for evidence of parties for 24th August 1921, and in the order-sheet of that date, directed payment of process-fee in these words "process at once," instead of paying "process at once" the plaintiff paid it on 11th August 1921. The result was that no witnesses attended at the hearing on 24th August 1921. The plaintiff also was not personally present to explain why the payment of talbana was delayed and why the witnesses also did not turn up. The Court, therefore, passed the following order:

"Plaintiff by Mr. Bapat. Defendants by Mr. Pande. Plaintiff is not himself present and he paid process just after a fortnight to cite the witnesses. So within 13 days it is impossible that witnesses could be served. Sufficient time was given. I have seen the parties invariably neglecting the orders. Process was ordered to be paid at once and it was not paid till after 13 days. I dismiss the suit for not paying process in time, vide Mote v. Kanhya (1). The defendants cited no witnesses."

An appeal was preferred against this decision to the Court of Additional District Judge, Amraoti, who dismissed it on 23rd November 1921 on the ground that no appeal lay against it. This Court was, therefore, moved by a petition for revision dated 29th November 1921, and the following order was passed on 17th January 1923:—

"It is said that the Munsif should have proceeded under O. XVII, r. 3, first Schedule, Civil Procedure Code. It appears to me that he has done so and his order is in effect a judgment. The Munsif should have proceeded to draw up a decree. This it is still open to him to do. The applicant should move him for a decree to be drawn up. He will then be entitled to appeal from the decree. The application is dismissed. No order as to costs."

The Court of first instance was then moved on 31st January 1923 to draw up a decree and the same was drawn up on 17th February 1923 after the record was perused. Against the decree so drawn up the appeal was filed in Additional District Judge's Court on 16th March 1923. It has been entertained as being in time and was allowed and the case was remanded to first Court for giving plaintiff opportunity to prove his case. Against this order of remand the present miscellaneous appeal is filed.

It will be seen from the above that this Court had to point out to the Munsif that he had failed to perform the imperative duty which the law had cast on him in the matter of drawing up a decree in terms of his judgment as a necessary step for the termination of the suit pending before him. The failure on the part of the Court of first instance to follow up its judgment by a decree necessarily caused delay and suspended the right of appeal of the party aggrieved by the decision. Moreover, if we are to go only by the decision already given, it will be seen that the words "he will then be entitled to appeal from the decree" in the above Order amount to a clear adjudication between the parties that the appeal already preferred was premature; neither party can now go behind that adjudication and the defendants cannot say that plaintiff was entitled to appeal from the decree even before it was drawn up.

But it is argued that, as required by O. XX, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code, the decree must be dated the day on which the judgment was pronounced, that is, as soon as it was drawn up, it must be treated as if it had been in existence since 24th August 1921 and, consequently, the limitation for filing an appeal against it must be counted as if it had commenced from 24th August 1921 and not from the date on which it was actually drawn up and signed by the Court. Under ordinary conditions, where the decree is drawn up within the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal this argument may hold good. But if I were to uphold this contention in cases where, as here, there is a failure on the Court's part to perform its own duty and the mistake had to be pointed out and corrected by this Court and this took up nearly 17 months, and thereafter the decree was drawn up, or, in other words, where the delay on the part of the Court in drawing up its decree is so enormous as to extend even beyond the usual period of limitation, I would be putting a premium upon default on the part of a Judge of the Subordinate Court in the performance of his imperative duty to pass a decree, which the Statute—section 33, Civil Procedure Code—has imposed on him, and thus victimize a litigant for the Judge's failure, and that, too, simply because, for no fault of his own, he could not apply for, and obtain, a copy of a non-existent decree, and lodge his memorandum of appeal without such a copy.

"Let not the act of the Court harm anybody" is the maxim which must come to the appellant's help in such cases. In my opinion the suit must in such cases be treated as being pending before the Court until it actually draws up and signs the decree. In a case reported in Jotindra Mohan Tagore v. Bejoy Chand Mahatap (2) the Judges of the Calcutta High Court held that in order to be operative, a final decree in a partition-suit, must, under the Stamp Act, be engrossed on stamp-paper as required by that Act, and until the Judge signs the decree so engrossed, the suit could not be said to have terminated. This necessarily involved the position that the adjudication contained in the judgment does not decide the suit, until the Court frames and signs an operative decree. The law gives a right of appeal not against the judgment merely but against the decree. No right of appeal could, therefore, come into play until a proper decree comes into existence. See in this connection section 96 of the Code of Civil Procedure which gives a right of appeal against the decree.

The Limitation Act presupposes the existence of a decree. The starting point of limitation as given in the third column against Article 152 is the date of the decree appealed from. Where the law creates a limitation, and the party is disabled to conform to that limitation without any default in him, and he has no remedy over it, the law will ordinarily excuse him. O. XLl, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code, lays down that every memorandum of appeal shall be accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed from * * * A memorandum of appeal is not a good memorandum of appeal in law unless it is accompanied by a copy of the decree appealed against. The Appellate Court cannot dispense with it, and a copy of the judgment only is not sufficient: Chamela Kuer v. Amir Khan (3), Bhawani Prasad v. Kallu (4), Qasim Ali Khan v. Bhagwanta Kunwan (5), Sir Henry Drake-Brockman, J. C., in Parashram v. Likhani (6) also accepted this view as correct. In Mahu v. Kishan (7) Stanyon, A. J. C., has pointed out that "the drawing up of a decree is a conscious, intentional, and formal act whereby the Court notifies its disposal of matters in controversy in accordance with its adjudication thereupon; and no right of appeal under section 97, Civil Procedure Code, arises until a decree has been drawn up." The learned A. J. C. makes the following observations at pp. 95 and 98: "If a Court having written a judgment which should be followed by a decree fails to draw up such decree, the remedy of the party who wants that decree whether for appeal or for execution, is to apply for it, and if it is refused to move the High Court in revision. But until the decree has been drawn there can be neither appeal nor execution. * * *

* It is clear that as regards the final decree, the Court has no option. Section 33, Civil Procedure Code, clearly refers to the final disposal of a suit by the Court trying it and it is imperatively laid down that such disposal shall be by a judgment followed by a decree."

The necessary outcome of all these decisions is that, so long as there is no decree duly drawn up and signed there is no right of appeal, and that no valid memorandum of appeal can be lodged without a copy of the decree which must accompany it. This necessarily involves a further position that there can be no legal obligation on a litigant to apply for a copy of a decree which is non-existent; the existence of the decree is a necessary condition precedent to the accrual of even the right or obligation to apply for a copy. He is in no way responsible for the delay in making his application for a copy of the decree if his right to apply has remained suspended in the air, by reason of the delay on the Court's part to draw up and sign its decree.

It is, however, argued that the law casts upon him the duty to move the Court to pass a decree and that if he had done so early enough before the expiry of 30 days from 24th August 1921 all this delay would have been avoided. I can find no appropriate or direct authority in support of this contention. On the contrary, there is authority the other way. In Kaluram Pirchand v. Gangaram Sakharam (8), it was held that there is no provision requiring a party or his pleader to move the Court to draw up a decree and mere omission to ask the Court to do that which it is the duty of the Court to do on its own motion cannot affect his right to appeal, and, further, that under section 97 of Civil Procedure Code his right to appeal arose only when there was a decree based on the findings on preliminary issues.

The quotation from Mahu v. Kishan (7), also does not show that it is the duty of the party to move. It simply indicates how a litigant may proceed. I am, therefore, of opinion that it was not the plaintiffs' duty to apply for the drawing up of the decree, but that a duty was cast by the State on the Court to draw it up. The plaintiffs are not, therefore, to blame for not having applied. I further hold that they were under no obligation even to apply for a copy of the decree even until the Court drew it up and that they are entitled to the exclusion of the whole of the time, between 24th August 1921 and 17th February 1923, apart from the provisions of section 5 of the Limitation Act. I am fully alive to the view taken in Seth Jagannath v.

Gangaram (9), which has been recently followed by Kotval, A. J. C., in Narayan v. Ramdulare (10). The following passage in Seth Jagannath v. Gangaram (9), goes against the view I have taken:—

"I think that the time requisite for obtaining a copy must be taken to commence only when the applicant does something in order to obtain the copy and to end when he obtains the copy. If a decree has not been drawn up and signed at the time when an application for a copy of it is made, and the making of the copy is thereby delayed, such period of delay must be allowed for in computing the time which was requisite for obtaining the copy. But it could never have been intended that a would-be appellant should be allowed to sleep over his right of appeal and then to claim extension of the period of limitation by taking advantage of a delay with which he had no direct concern.

"Under ordinary circumstances, therefore, I should have held that the present appeal was time-barred. I have, however, ascertained that it has always been the practice of this Court to reckon limitation from the date on which the decree purports to have been signed and this erroneous practice is to some extent countenanced in a Circular which has only recently been amended. I have no doubt but that the appellant was misled by the previous practice of this Court and I must, therefore, declare, under section 5 of the Limitation Act, that the appeal has been presented within the period of limitation prescribed therefor."

With due respect to the learned Judge who made these observations, I express my dissent from them particularly in view of the Statute contained in sections 96 and 97, Civil Procedure Code, and the more recent pronouncements based upon the right construction of those sections.

In this view, no question of excusing the delay under the discretion vested in the Appellate Court by section 5 of the Limitation Act arises in the case. Even taking the case as coming under that section, the rulings in Karsondas Dharamsey v. Bai Gangabai (11), and Bhimrao v. Ayyappa (12), cannot be said to militate against the view taken by me as the delay here is not due to any default or gross neglect on the part of a litigant but it is due to the Court's neglect to do its duty. Consequently, it ought to constitute sufficient cause for excusing the delay.

It is, however, argued that had the respondents moved the 1st Court as soon as this Court passed its order dated 17th January 1923, the decree would have been drawn up earlier, i.e., this delay was not such as was unavoidable and the same should not, therefore, be excused. But this contention has no substance. The plaintiffs-respondents had to obtain a copy of this Court's order and this naturally took some time. They moved the 1st Court on 31st January 1923 but the Court could not pass the decree without the record. It appears the record was received on or about 17th February 1923 and without any further delay the Court passed the decree on 17th February 1923. It is next said that they should not have delayed the filing of the appeal against the decree so passed till 16th March 1923 after having obtained a copy thereof on 24th February 1923. But counting the 30 days' limitation from 17th February 1923 the last date up to which they could have filed the appeal was 19th March 1923, even if we do not give them the concession to which they may be entitled under section 12 of the Limitation Act. I think the Judge of the lower Appellate Court has rightly exercised his discretion in the matter. This disposes of the first three points set out at the beginning of this judgment.

The only point that remains to be considered is whether the lower Appellate Court was right in interfering with the 1st Court's decree dismissing the suit for plaintiffs' failure to obey its order to pay "process at once." I think there is no warrant for visiting the extreme penalty of a dismissal of a suit upon a plaintiff, for a failure, to obey an unreasonable order such as this. The lower Appellate Court has correctly pointed out that an order to pay

"process at once" militates against both the spirit and the letter of O. XLVIII, r. 1 (2), Civil Procedure Code. The fixation of time within which to pay process, conveys an idea of giving reasonable facilities to a litigant who seeks the help of the Court in the matter of summoning witnesses to obey the order. I understand this to mean that the Court with due regard to the provisions of O. XVI, r. 9, Civil Procedure Code, makes terms with the party who requires its help and declares to him that it will try to procure the attendance of the witnesses to be summoned for the hearing provided the process-fee is paid, within the time to be fixed by it and that if he delays such payment, he will do so at his own risk. To call upon him to pay process at once is virtually to insist on immediate payment of process and to decline to help in the matter of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and in effect to penalize the default by the dismissal of the suit ultimately : Compare Dhanu Ran Mahto v. Musli Mahto (13).

I am not, therefore, prepared to uphold an order which would work such injustice to the litigants. The lower Appellate Court has given very good reasons for differing from the Munsif on this point and for excusing the technical default on plaintiffs' part and for giving the parties an opportunity to fight out the case on the merits. I, therefore, decline to interfere. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. The costs in the Courts below will abide the result of the suit.

NARAIN DASS DUTT v. BANKU BEHARY CHATTOPADHYA

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 355 OF 1921.

Present : —Mr. Justice Richardson
and Mr. Justice Page.NARAIN DASS DUTT AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS*versus*BANKU BEHARY CHATTOPADHYA AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 183—Mortgage-decree in favour of several mortgagees—No community of interest among mortgagees—Revision in favour of one, whether of avail in favour of another mortgagee—Revivor, test of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908)—Objections to execution, etc., which Court to decide.

The test whether an order is an order of revivor or not is whether it decided that the decree is still capable of execution and the decree-holder is entitled to enforce it. [p. 1005, col. 2.]

Chutterput Singh v. Sang Jumari Mull, 1 L. R. 43 Cal. 903, referred to.

Under the scheme of the Civil Procedure Code the Court transmitting a decree is not the Court to decide objections on the part of the judgment-debtor that the decree is incapable of execution or that execution is barred by limitation.

Such objection should be taken before, and be heard and determined by, the Court to which the decree is transmitted as the Court of execution. Orders of transmission are treated as quasi-administrative orders and, on the original side, are made by the Registrar who is vested with jurisdiction to decide such objections. [p. 1005, col. 2.]

Where several mortgagees, whose interests are not at all joint are made plaintiff and for convenience their claims are tried in one suit and dealt with in one decree, an order operating as a revivor in favour of one of the mortgagee decree-holders can be of no avail to any of the other mortgagee decree-holders. [p. 1006, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 2nd August 1921.

Babu Ramchandra Masumdar, with Babus Rupendra Kumar Mitra, Nalin Chander Paul and Devendranath Mandal, for the Appellants.—In this case, of the four mortgagees in the original suit, three have been satisfied. The fourth is now trying to have execution, and the present proceedings arise at his instance and he, therefore, is the principal respondent. The original suit was instituted on 27th August 1902. A decree was passed by this Honourable Court in the usual terms. The Registrar's certificate bears the date of 3rd September 1903. The order absolute was made on the 4th February 1905. In August 1905, the properties mortgaged to the first mortgagee were sold and he was paid off in full. In 1917, many other properties were sold at the instance of the second and third mortgagees and their debts were paid off in full. The mortgagor died in 1919. In the meantime, the fourth mortgagee had purchased the mortgagor's rights of the security, for a certain amount against his dues. After mortgagor's death, he applied for bringing on the record the legal representatives and for execution of decree. The decree was transmitted to the Hooghly Court and properties of the mortgagor not comprised within the mortgage were attached. Notice of this was given to the widow and appellants, who preferred objection to the High Court under O. XXI, r. 22 of Civil Procedure Code. On this petition of objection a consent order was passed. The learned lower Court has held that there has been revivor. Revivor can take place only when a notice has been issued and served upon the judgment-debtor : Jagendra Chandra Roy v. Syam Das (1), and O. XXI, r. 22. The issue of notice itself is not sufficient to revive : Monohar v. Futteh Chand (2). Service of notice is necessary : Guru Das Biswas v. Bhowanipore Zemindary Co. (3). Before revivor can take place, he must show that notice has been served. More order for issue of notice is not sufficient. These are facts and your Lordships cannot from mere order presume service. These things must be proved by actual evidence before the lower Court. As such it is not a pure question of law. The decree was not a joint decree. The decree-holder himself admits it in petition for execution. The decree itself shows that there are four separate and distinct decrees. The words of the decree are inconsistent with any idea of jointness. Separate accounts were to be taken. The real test is whether one mortgagee could proceed to execution of the decree irrespective of the others: O. XXXIV, r. 1. If the fourth mortgagee had a suit the prior mortgagees would not have been necessary parties. Let us reverse the positions. If the first mortgagee brought a suit, he could ask the puisne mortgagees to redeem only those properties which come within his mortgage and not other properties.

If it was not a joint decree, there would be no revivor. Article 182 of Indian Limitation Act Explanation 1 and Article 183, Indian Limitation Act. These two show that where there is a joint decree in favour of some, application by one should enure for the benefit of all. There is no such provision in Article 183. So in case of separate decrees application by the second mortgagee did enure in favour of all: James Russel McLaren v. Veeriah Naidu (4), and Krishnanyuk v. Gajendra Naidu (5). The case of joint debtors stands on the same footing as the case of a joint creditor. That seems to be the intention of the Legislature. As to the construction of Article 183, the directions of the decree show that it is separate decree. The present decree-holder could apply for execution in 1905 and the period would run from that time. It was not necessary that they should be able to execute the personal part of the decree: Chutterput Singh v. Sait Sumari Mal (6).

Mr. Marti, with him Babus Apurha Charan Mukherjee and Manmatha Nath Ganguly for the respondents.—The way in which the decree was drawn up clearly shows that it was meant to be a joint decree and as such the steps taken by any of them would revive the decree in favour of all. The separateness is merely one for the purpose of accounting. It cannot have any other effect. Moreover, the consent order revived the decree. Articles 182 and 183, Indian Limitation Act, O. XXI, r. 22. Notice was issued. Reads order sheet. That should be sufficient for all purposes. It was not obligatory at all to prove service, specially when the court has ordered, issue of notice. The learned Judge was perfectly right in holding as he has done. As regards limitation it must be noted that it was the execution of the personal part of the decree that was sought for. At that time the personal part of the decree could not be executed.

Babu Rumohandru Mazumdar, gave a reply.

JUDGMENT.

Richardson, J.—This appeal arises out of an application for the execution of a mortgage-decree and is from the order of the Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated 22nd August 1921, directing that execution should proceed. The appellants are the sons and representatives of the mortgagor defendant in the suit in which the decree was made. It will be convenient to distinguish the plaintiff in that suit as the first mortgagee and the three several puisne mortgagees who were also impleaded, as the second, third and fourth mortgagees respectively. The principal respondent, Banku Behari Chattopadhyaya, is the fourth mortgagee, at whose instance the learned Subordinate Judge made his order and to whom I shall refer as the respondent. The other respondents are formal parties representing the other mortgagees whose claims have been satisfied.

The question for decision, whether the application for execution was in time, is governed by Article 183 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act of 1908. The material facts are as follows:

Apparently, two properties had been mortgaged to the first mortgagee and one of these and thirty-two others to the second mortgagee and again to the third mortgagee, while all thirty-four properties had been mortgaged to the respondent together with certain mortgage-rights belonging to the mortgagor. A doubt was suggested whether the respondent's security did not also comprise one or two additional properties but the point is of little importance.

The mortgage-suit was instituted on the Original Side of the High Court in 1901. On the 27th August 1902, a decree was made therein. The decree is in common form and its scheme is quite simple; but for purposes which will appear, I will state its substance. It was referred to the Registrar to ascertain and certify the amounts due on foot of each of the four mortgages. The usual period of six months was to be allowed for redemption computed from the date on which the Registrar's certificate should be confirmed and countersigned by a Judge. Provision is then made, in case the mortgagor should default in paying the certified sums within the period of grace, for the calculation of the aggregate amount payable in respect of each of the mortgages. In that connection the very general direction is given that, "in the event of such default.....the said several mortgaged premises be sold with the approbation of the said Registrar to the best purchaser or purchasers that can be got for the same, provided that the said Registrar shall consider that a sufficient sum has been offered." The sale proceeds of the two properties were to be carried to a separate account bearing the name of the first mortgagee, the sale proceeds of the thirty-two properties to another account bearing the names of the second and third mortgagees and the sale proceeds of the properties exclusively mortgaged to the respondent to a third account bearing his name. Then follow directions as to the application of the sale proceeds under which any balance remaining after the first, second and third mortgagees had been satisfied were to be added to the sale proceeds of the properties exclusively mortgaged to the respondent and applied in satisfaction of his dues. In conclusion, the right to a personal remedy against the mortgagor is conferred on each mortgagee in case his security should prove insufficient.

The Registrar, having taken the necessary accounts, brought in his certificate in due course and it was countersigned by a Judge on the 3rd September 1903. The certificate states that there would be due to the respondent on the 2nd March 1904, the sum of Rs. 78,239-6-3. It is common ground that on the same date, apparently by private treaty, the mortgagor sold to the respondent the mortgage-rights included in his security, it being agreed that the price, Rs. 35,000, should be set off against his mortgage-debt.

Nothing further seems to have been done by the mortgagor in the way of payment and, on the 4th February 1905, an order absolute for sale was made, the terms of which have not been printed or placed before us. In August 1905, the two properties mortgaged to the first mortgagee were sold and he was fully paid off, a balance being left over which, presumably, went to the second mortgagee.

No further steps were taken till 1917 when, doubtless at the instance of the second and third mortgagees, or one or the other of them, it is not suggested that the respondent moved in the matter—twenty-eight other properties were sold. The proceeds were only sufficient to satisfy the second and third mortgagees and there was no balance over.

In April 1919, the mortgagor died and in the following month the respondent, who had done nothing since his purchase of the mortgage-rights in 1903, applied to the High Court, praying that the mortgagor's widow and his two sons, the present appellants, be substituted on the record in his place; that satisfaction of the decree in his favour be entered to the extent of Rs. 35,000; that he be at liberty to execute the decree for the sum of Rs. 82,725-11-3, being the balance of the principal and interest calculated up to the 22nd May 1919, the date of the application, and that the respondent having been credibly informed that there were no assets available for the satisfaction of the decree within the original jurisdiction but that there were assets available in the Hooghly District, the decree be transmitted to the Hooghly Court for execution in respect of the balance claimed.

No notice of this application was given to the widow or the appellants, nor does the law require that in such cases such notice should be given. On the 27th June 1919, an order was made signed by the Registrar, but not by a Judge, under which the respondent was to be at liberty to execute the decree against the widow and sons, and a copy of the decree, together with a copy of the Registrar's certificate countersigned on the 3rd September 1903, and "a certificate of partial satisfaction to the extent of Rs. 35,000" was to be transmitted to the Hooghly Court for execution.

There was some delay in preparing the latter certificate. The document is dated 27th July 1920, and it certifies under the signature of a Judge, that satisfaction of the sum of Rs. 82,725-11-3 "has not been obtained within the local limits of the jurisdiction of this Court and that no order has been made by this Court for execution of the said decree,"

NARAIN DASS DUTT v. BANKU BEHARY CHATTOPADHYA

The decree having been transmitted to the Hooghly Court, the respondent, on the 4th July 1920, filed in that Court a formal application for execution in the prescribed tabular form. Execution was sought by the attachment and sale of six properties which admittedly were not properties comprised within the respondent's security. The respondent, therefore, was, and is, relying on his personal remedy against the mortgagor or against assets of the mortgagor in the hands of his representatives.

Notice of this application having been given to the widow and the appellants under O. XXI, r. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code, they brought in their objections not to the Hooghly Court but to the High Court. The objections are stated in a petition dated 26th February 1921, which asserts inter alia that the mortgagor had left no assets in the Hooghly district, or any that had come to the petitioners' hands; that all the properties comprised in the respondent's security had not been sold; that his widow was not one of the mortgagor's legal representatives, and that execution was barred by the law of limitation.

The petition came before Pearson, J., on the 8th March 1921, and a consent order was made in terms which were subsequently reduced to writing. The order as drawn up bears date the 22nd April 1921, and, as it seems to me, its only appreciable effect was to amend the order of 27th June 1919, the order for the transmission of the decree by striking out the name of the mortgagor's widow. I shall come a little later to my reasons for regarding the other amendments made as immaterial.

I have now stated the facts to which Article 183 of the Limitation Act has to be applied. Under that Article the period of limitation for an application "to enforce a judgment, decree or order of any Court established by Royal Charter in the exercise of its ordinary Original Civil jurisdiction" is twelve years running from "the time when a present right to enforce the judgment, decree or order accrues to some person capable of releasing the right." Under the proviso to the Article, "when the judgment, decree or order has been revived," the twelve years are to be computed from the date of such revivor. I need not read the whole of the proviso because the respondent does not set up any payment or acknowledgment by the mortgagor within any period now material.

If, then, on the 4th February 1905, when the order absolute for sale was made, a present right accrued to the respondent to enforce the decree of 27th August 1902, and he did nothing which can be construed as an application for the enforcement of the decree until he applied to the High Court in 1919 for the transmission of the decree to Hooghly, he is clearly out of time, unless he can show that, within the twelve years before he so applied, something was done or some order was made which operated to revive the decree in his favour. The learned Subordinate Judge accepted the respondent's contention that the order of 27th June 1919, coupled with the consent order of April 1921, and as amended thereby, constituted a revivor. That view, as it appears to me, entirely misconceives the nature of the consent order and the effect of the amendments made. As I regard the matter, the parties or their legal advisers recognised when they came before Pearson, J., that what I may call the substantial objections of the appellants to the execution of the decree fell to be decided not by the learned Judge but by the Hooghly Court to which the decree had been transmitted. The agreement arrived at related merely to the form of the order for the transmission of the decree and not to its substance. When the original order, made without notice to the appellants, gave liberty to the respondent to execute the decree against them, such liberty was merely a liberty to the respondent to proceed in execution subject to all just exceptions on the part of the appellants and it would, perhaps, have obviated misunderstanding if some such words had been introduced.

The amendments in no way altered the meaning of the original order in this respect. The widow's name was struck out because every one was agreed that the mortgagor was fully represented by his sons and that a mistake had been made in including the widow as legal representative. The amendment in no way affected the rights of the respondent as against the appellants, though the result might have been to drive the respondent to separate proceedings against the widow, if any, of the mortgaged properties not already sold had found its way into her possession.

NARAIN DASS DUTT v. BANKU BEHARY CHATTOPADHYA

Then, again, when liberty was given in the amended order to execute the decree against the appellants "to the extent of the property of the said Sarat Chundra Dutt, the mortgagor, which has come to their hands and has not been duly disposed of," these added words were clearly intended not to give the respondent any right which he did not otherwise possess but to protect the appellants. The words are taken from section 50 of the Civil Procedure Code by which the Court of Execution and the respondent would have been bound, whether the words were in the order or not. Their insertion, therefore, made no difference one way or the other.

If further illustration be needed of the kind of thing the parties were thinking about, it will be found in the alteration of the words of the original order imputing that there were, in fact, assets available in the Hooghly District into words imputing that the respondent alleged that there were such assets. Obviously, the appellants were anxious that nothing in the order for the transmission of the decree should prejudice them when they brought their substantial objections before the Hooghly Court for decision. The fact that the amendments introduced were misunderstood in that Court shows that there is a danger in being too meticulous in matters of mere form. In my opinion, however, the further consideration that the consent order left intact the certificate of the 13th July 1920, with the statement therein that no order had been made by the High Court for execution puts the true effect of the amendments beyond all doubt or dispute. The order of the 27th June remained after amendment, as it was before amendment, a mere order for the transmission of the decree to the Hooghly Court. Apart from the effect of removing the widow's name, the order decided nothing of any materiality as to the rights of the parties.

The decision of the Full Bench in Chutterput Singh v. Sait Sumari Mal (6), is clear authority for the proposition that such an order does not constitute a revivor. That was a strong decision because there, in accordance with the practice which then prevailed, notice of the decree-holder's application for the transmission of his decree to another Court had been given to the judgment-debtor. The practice has since been changed (see notes to Chapter XVII, Rule 1, p. 253 of Mr. Hechle's Rules and Orders of the Original Side). The point is, that section 39 of the Code does not require notice to be given to the judgment-debtor before a decree is transmitted to another Court, while O. XXI, r. 10, expressly provides that if the decree has been transmitted to another Court, the application for execution shall be made to that Court and in cases where notice under O. XXI, r. 22 has to be given that Rule provides that the notice shall be issued by the Court executing the decree. Under the scheme of the Code, the Court transmitting a decree is not the Court to decide objections on the part of the judgment-debtor that the decree is incapable of execution or that execution is barred by limitation. Such objections should be taken before and heard and determined by the Court to which the decree is transmitted as the Court of Execution. Orders of transmission are treated as quasi-administrative orders and on the Original Side are made by the Registrar who is vested with jurisdiction to decide such objections. But if the Code be followed, the nature of an order of this kind should be the same whether it is made by an officer of the Court or by a Judge.

In the present case the order of 27th June 1919, was, as usual, made by the Registrar and if, as the result of the proceedings before Pearson, J., the order in its amended form was adopted by the learned Judge that in no way affected the character of the order as a mere order transmitting the decree to the Hooghly Court. The learned Judge was, no doubt, entitled under section 50 of the Code to decide who were the proper representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, though I do not say whether or not the Hooghly Court had, under O. XXI, r. 22, a concurrent jurisdiction in this respect. The point does not arise because this question of parties has been finally settled by agreement.

In my opinion, therefore, the order of 27th June 1919, whether in its original or in its amended form, did not amount to an order of revivor. It does not fulfil the test laid down by Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee in an earlier case and adopted by the learned Chief Justice in the Full Bench case. The order did not decide "that the decree is still capable of execution and the decree-holder is entitled to enforce it."

NARAIN DASS DUTT v. BANKU BEHARY CHATTOPADHYA

I have said enough to show that, in my view, the suggestion of the learned Counsel for the respondent that by agreeing to the amendment of the order of 27th June, the appellants "waived" this objection to the execution of the decree is a complete travesty of what occurred before Pearson, J. Assuming that an objection on the ground of limitation can be waived, neither the learned Judge nor any body else at the time could have attributed any such effect to the consent order.

The conclusion of the learned Subordinate Judge that the application for execution was in time cannot be supported on the grounds on which he put it.

I have still, however, to deal with certain contentions which were raised for the first time in the appeal.

It was contended that, inasmuch as the respondent is a puisne mortgagee, time did not begin to run against him from the date of the decree but from 1917 when the decree was executed by mortgagees whose interests were prior to his own. In the alternative, it was suggested that if time ran against him from the date of the decree or the date of the order absolute, the orders for execution which must have been made in 1905 at the instance of the first mortgagee and in 1917 at the instance of the second and third mortgagees were orders reviving the decree to the benefit of which he is entitled.

As it appears to me, neither of these contentions can be accepted. Upon the terms of the decree of 1902, the substance of which I have already set out, the respondent had as much right to enforce it as any of the other mortgagee-decree-holders. It is immaterial whether the decree became enforceable on the date it bears or on the 4th February 1905 when the order absolute was made. I can see no reason why, after the latter date at any rate, the respondent could not have applied to the Court for the execution of the decree. If he might have so applied, then, in the language of Article 183, a present right accrued to him on that date (if not before) to enforce the decree, a right which he was capable of releasing. It may be that any of the prior mortgagees who desired it might have obtained the carriage of the proceedings but that does not affect the respondent's right to apply for execution. It is absurd to suppose that if none of the prior mortgagees had desired to take any steps, the respondent would have had to fold his hands and do nothing. Nor have the directions in the decree as to the application of the proceeds of execution any bearing on the point. Any costs the respondent might have incurred in executing the decree would have been a first charge on those proceeds.

As to the execution in 1905 and 1917, that in 1905 cannot in any case help the respondent who took no steps till 1919. But, wholly apart from any question of time, why should an order operating as a revivor in favour of one of the mortgagee-decree-holders be of avail to any of the others? In substance, as against the mortgagor, all the mortgagees were plaintiffs. For convenience, their several claims were tried in one suit and were dealt with in one decree. But their interests are in no sense joint; the subordination of the rights of each puisne mortgagee to those of the mortgagee or mortgagees prior to him does not denote any community of interest. The fallacy of the argument would be apparent if it were suggested that an acknowledgment or payment to one mortgagee operated as an acknowledgment or payment to the others. For the present purpose an order amounting to a revivor and an acknowledgment or payment belong to the same category.

For the reasons indicated, I am of opinion that the respondent's application for execution was out of time and should have been dismissed.

The learned Subordinate Judge dealt with another objection on the part of the appellants that the respondent was not entitled to proceed against assets of the mortgagor not forming a part of his security till he had exhausted his demands against the properties mortgaged. Apparently, there were four properties mortgaged to the respondent which have not been sold in execution of the decree. The learned Judge refused to entertain this objection but his reasons are here also open to criticism. His conclusion depends to some extent at any rate on his view, which I hold to be mistaken, of the consent order of 1921. The result at which I have already arrived makes it unnecessary to pursue this point further.

AKKANNA CHETTI v. CHANDU CHETTI

I will only add that, if the respondent had applied for execution during the mortgagors' lifetime instead of waiting, as he did, till the mortgagor died, information might have been available as to the four properties and possibly as to other matters now concealed from us.

In my opinion this appeal should be allowed with costs here and below—hearing fee in this Court 10 gold mohurs.

Landlord and Tenant—Lease containing forfeiture clause—Non-payment of rent—Suit for rent and forfeiture—Decree directing payment within certain time—Amount enhanced on appeal—Forfeiture, relief against.

In cases where forfeiture is sought to be enforced by a landlord under the terms of a decree, the landlord should prove conclusively that the decree which he is executing has given him that right. The Court ought to lean in favour of the tenant against forfeiture rather than in landlord's favour in such cases.

In a suit by a landlord for recovery of rent and for enforcing the right of forfeiture for non-payment of rent under the lease deed the Court of first instance decreed a certain sum of money for rent and directed that if the amount was paid within a month from the date of decree the forfeiture would be relieved against. The tenant paid the sum within time but on appeal the amount payable was increased by a small sum, the time for payment one month from the date of the appellate decree. In other respects the lower Court's decree was confirmed.

Held, that the payment of the said excess sum within one month from the date of the appellate decree as directed by the Appellate Court was not a condition precedent to the forfeiture being relieved against.

Appeal against the order of the District Court of South Kanara, dated 9th day of March 1922 in A. S. No. 311 of 1921, preferred against the order of the Court of the District Munsif of Udipi, dated the 31st day of August 1921 in E. A. No. 241 of 1921 (in O. S. No. 530 of 1919 and A. S. No. 153 of 1920 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara).

Messrs. B. Sitaram Rao and K. Srinivasa Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises the question whether the respondent, the tenant, has lost his right to hold possession of the property by forfeiture. The suit was brought by the landlord, the appellant before us, for recovery of rent and also for enforcing the right of forfeiture which he had under the lease-deed for non-payment of rent. The first Court decreed a certain sum of money for rent and directed that if that amount was paid within one month from the date of the decree the forfeiture would be relieved against. Accordingly, the tenant paid a sum over Rs. 200 into Court in time; but, unfortunately for him, there was an appeal to the Sub-Court and that Court increased the amount of rent payable by about Rs. 21. The question we have to consider in this case is whether by the decree of that Court, the payment of Rs. 21 within one month from the date of that Court's decree was a condition precedent to the forfeiture being relieved against or not. The Munsif held that it was, and the money not having been paid in time, he enforced the forfeiture and directed possession to be given to the landlord of the lands in suit. On appeal, the District Judge has held that the decree of the Appellate Court is not so clear as to make it necessary to construe it as leading to forfeiture if the extra money that was ordered to be paid by that Court was not paid within one month from the date of its decree. The matter is not very clear on the wording of the Appellate Court's decree or of its judgment. What the Court said in its appellate judgment, after deciding that Rs. 21 more should be paid was, "time for payment, one month from this date." That is the last sentence in that judgment but it did not say anything about non-payment leading to forfeiture being enforced. In the decree that was drawn up, the language used is not any the clearer. It says "that the defendants do pay to the second plaintiff within one month from this date Rs. 21 for sundries claimed in the plaint in addition to the money already decreed by the lower Court." Then it says lower down, after making an order as to costs, "that in other respects the lower Court's decree is confirmed." The matter, we think, is left in ambiguity as to whether the non-payment of the extra Rs. 21 would lead to forfeiture or not. In cases of this sort where forfeiture is sought to be enforced by a landlord under the terms of a decree we think it right that he should prove conclusively that the decree which he is executing has given him that right. The Court ought to lean in favour of the tenant against forfeiture than in the landlord's favour in such cases. We are not prepared to say that the District Judge is wrong in holding in this case that the decree does not make it clear that forfeiture will be involved if the extra Rs. 21 is not paid within one month. What exactly was meant by a month's time being given is not very clear.

In these circumstances, we are not prepared to differ from the District Judge in his construction of the decree. We must, therefore, dismiss the appeal, but in the circumstances of the case as neither of the parties can be said to be free from fault, we direct that each party do bear his costs throughout.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) s. 157—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit between rival claimants to occupancy holding, whether cognisable by Civil Court—Matter decided finally by Revenue Court—Jurisdiction of Civil Court, whether barred.

Blup v. Ram Lal, 11 Ind. Cas. 268; 8 A. L. J. 1009; 33 A. 795; Jagannath v. Ajudhia Singh, 17 Ind. Cas. 876; 35 A. 14; 10 A. L. J. 408; Ganesh v. Kundan, 15 Ind. Cas. 33; *Imayal-un-nissa v. Once, a matter has been decided by a Revenue Court it cannot be re-opened in a Civil Court. [p. 1010, col. 1.]

When a matter has not been finally decided in a Revenue Court, for instance where an appeal is pending against the decision of an Assistant Collector, and the same question arises in a suit filed in a Civil Court over which the latter Court has jurisdiction, it is not precluded from deciding the question merely by reason of the fact that it has already been decided by a Revenue Court of first instance.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Farrukhabad, dated the 28th of January 1922.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.
Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a complicated case in view of the multiplicity of the rulings of this Court, some of which are not easily reconcilable with others.

The present defendant No. 1 instituted a suit in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent against the plaintiffs, and the Assistant Collector by a judgment dated the 21st of January 1921 decreed the claim for Rs. 3-5-4. His judgment proceeded mainly on the presumed correctness of the entries of the Revenue papers and his finding in effect was that plot No. 211/3 which was in dispute in that case was a sir plot belonging to the present defendant No. 1. An appeal was filed from that judgment and was pending in the Court of the Collector when the present suit was instituted in the Civil Court for a declaration that the said plot No. 211/3 as well as two other plots Nos. 211/1 and 211/2 were occupancy holdings of which the plaintiffs and the defendants were joint tenants. The cause of action alleged in the plaint was the decree for arrears of rent passed by the Assistant Collector which was said not to have become final inasmuch as an appeal from that decree was pending in the Appellate Court on the revenue side.

The defendants again asserted that all these three plots were the sir plots of the defendants, the plaintiffs being only shukmi tenants. There were also pleas raised to the effect that the claim was barred by section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure as well as by section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

The learned Munsif who tried the case overruled the legal objections and decreed the suit on the merits holding that the plaintiffs and the defendants had a joint interest in the lands which were occupancy holdings. On appeal the findings and the decree of the first Court have been upheld by the learned District Judge.

I may mention that, simultaneously with these proceedings, the proceedings in the Revenue Court have continued. After the passing of the first Court's decree the Collector appears to have set aside the decree of the Assistant Collector and to have dismissed the suit for arrears of rent. A second appeal from that order is, I am informed, still pending before the District Judge. It is not quite clear whether the District Judge on the revenue side has or has not stayed proceedings to await the result of the final decision in the civil suit.

The main point raised in this appeal is that the claim was barred by section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act. In cases arising under this section there have been such a large number of rulings of this Court that it is practically impossible to summarise or even to refer to them. If the matter had been res integrum I would have had no hesitation in saying that the present suit was not cognisable by a Civil Court. Section 167 consists of two parts. The first part directs that "all suits and applications of the nature specified in the fourth schedule shall be heard and determined by the Revenue Courts." This apparently gives jurisdiction to the Revenue Courts to try not only suits and applications mentioned in the fourth schedule but also all such as are of the nature specified therein. The second portion of it says that "no Court other than a Revenue Court shall take cognizance of any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit or application might be brought or made". This confers exclusive jurisdiction on the Revenue Courts. And, therefore, all Courts other than Revenue Courts must refrain from trying such questions. It is noteworthy that the expression used is not "suits and applications" but "any dispute or matter in respect of which any such suit or application might be brought or made." The section has been obviously made very comprehensive in order to include all cases in which disputes arise in respect of a matter which can be disposed of by the Revenue Courts. The object of the section to my mind clearly is that all suits, no matter in what way the plaints are framed, should be instituted in a Revenue Court provided the dispute is such as can be disposed of by that Court.

If this were the correct view there is no doubt that the true test to apply in all such cases would be to ask the question 'whether the dispute which arises in the present case is one in respect of which any suit or application could have been brought in the Revenue Court?' It is true that a suit for a mere declaration against the defendant only to the effect that the parties are joint tenants of a holding is not one which falls within the fourth schedule. But if a suit were brought under section 95 of the Tenancy Act impleading the zemindar and asking for a declaration that the plaintiff was a tenant of the zemindar jointly with the pro forma defendant such a suit would clearly be exclusively triable by the Revenue Courts. It is also apparent that a mere declaration obtained in a Civil Court against the defendant would in no sense be binding on the landlord, who is no party to those proceedings and who may very well not recognise the present plaintiffs as his tenants. As against the landlord the Civil Court decree would be futile and a fresh litigation in the Revenue Court would be necessary. This being so, one would expect that the proper course to adopt in disputes about tenancy rights is to obtain a declaration in the Revenue Court both against the landlord and the rival tenant. In that view of the matter, I would have had no doubt that the dispute which arises in the present suit is one in respect of which a plaint if properly framed, could and ought to have been filed in the Revenue Court.

However, sitting as a Single Judge, I am bound to follow Division Bench cases of this Court. The series of authority against my view is overwhelming and I am bound to submit to the rule of law laid down therein. In Bhup v. Ram Lal (1), Jagannath v. Ajudhia Singh (2), Ganesh v. Kundan (3), Inayat-un-nissa v. Salim-un-nissa (4), and Najibullah v. Gulsher Khan (5) it has been held by this Court that a suit between rival claimants to a tenancy lies exclusively in a Civil Court and that such a suit is not one which is covered by section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act. That being the recognised interpretation of section 167, it must be held that the present suit, being in its nature one for a declaration of title against a rival claimant, was a suit which could only have been brought in the Civil Court.

This, however, does not dispose of the whole difficulty as previous to this suit the dispute with regard to plot No. 211/3 had in a different form been raised in a Revenue Court. What I have, therefore, further to see is the legal effect of that previous litigation. Although it has been held that section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act does not apply to suits between rival claimants to a tenancy, nevertheless, it has also been held that once a matter has been decided by a Revenue Court it cannot be re-opened in a Civil Court. This view is not based on the provisions of section 167 nor on the principle of res judicata, but rather on the general ground that the effect of allowing such a thing to be done would be to nullify the decree of the Revenue Court which is final and binding on the parties. I refrain from referring to any apparent inconsistency. That this is the view of the law is clear from the case of Kishore Singh v. Bahadur Singh (6), which has been followed in the recent Full Bench case of Mollo v. Ram Lal (7).

In the present case, however, the Revenue Court has not yet arrived at any final decision. The matter, as I have remarked above, is still pending before the District Judge. The question is whether this fact makes any difference or not.

The present suit relates to three plots Nos. 211/1, 211/2, and 211/3. It cannot be doubted that, so far as the two former plots are concerned, the previous proceedings in the Revenue Court cannot in view of the rulings of this Court be a bar to the present claim. The decree of the learned District Judge qua these two plots must therefore, stand as being based on a finding of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. The contention of the learned Vakil, can, therefore, be sustained, if at all, in respect of plot No. 211/3 only which was in dispute in the previous proceedings in the Revenue Court.

I find, however, that in at least one case Jaigopal Narain Singh v. Umandat (8) a Bench of this Court disposed of a civil suit finally on the ground that, although a similar dispute had been raised in a suit in the Revenue Court that suit was still pending, as the Board of Revenue in revision had postponed their final decision and were awaiting the decision of the civil suit. Whether a valid distinction can be drawn when the matter is pending not in an Appellate but a Revisional Court is not a question which I take upon myself to decide. There is the precedent quoted above which I can follow.

I have already remarked that in the previous case the judgment of the learned Assistant Collector proceeded mainly on the presumed correctness of the entries in the revenue papers, whereas the judgment of the Collector on appeal was based entirely on the decree of the Munsif in the civil suit. The only Court which has really gone into the merits of the case thoroughly is the Civil Court and in this civil litigation there are the concurrent findings of two Courts on the merits to the effect that the plaintiff and the defendant are jointly entitled to the lands which are really occupancy holdings and not sir plots.

If it were the fact that the final decision of the Revenue Court has been intentionally withheld with a view to see the result of the Civil Court litigation, I would have no hesitation in affirming the decree of the District Judge and leaving the revenue case to be disposed of in accordance with this decision. As, however, there are no materials on the record which would show to me the stage at which the second appeal before the District Judge has reached, I direct that the parties should file before me affidavits within a month from this date explaining the true situation. Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1922) s. 54—Sale-essential constituents—Test.

The two essential constituents of a real sale are the transfer of ownership and the payment or promise of payment of price; a transaction from which either of these is absent is not a sale at all.

Therefore, a sale-deed which recites that the vendee has already spent a thousand rupees on the vendor's litigation and that the vendor has "this day" received another thousand rupees and deposited the money with the vendee for defraying the further costs of the same litigation, and purports to make a transfer of ownership for a price paid and not for a price promised or part-paid and part-promised does not satisfy more than half the definition of a sale and is not a sale at all.

Appeal against the decree of Additional Sub-Judge, Akola, dated the 22nd December 1922, in C. S. No. 182 of 1920.

Mr. M. B. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi and V. K. Rajwade, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT:—The first contention in this appeal is that the payment of the full consideration or at least of a considerable part of it has been proved. The evidence given by the plaintiff-appellant himself goes a long way to prove that he never actually paid a single rupee to the defendant or to anybody else on his behalf. But even if he had produced fairly good evidence of payment it would be nullified by his failure to produce his account-books and by the circumstances in which that failure occurred which put it beyond doubt that he could have produced them but intentionally refrained from doing so. I have no hesitation in finding that no part of the consideration was ever paid.

It is next contended that an executed transfer by sale is not valid for want of consideration as an executory contract is. Several rulings of the High Court have been cited in support of this proposition but they very naturally fail to support it as it is directly contradictory of the clear terms of section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section defines a sale as a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-paid and part-promised and lays down that such transfer in the case of property of the kind with which we are concerned, can be made only by a registered instrument. The two essential constituents of a real sale are, therefore, the transfer of ownership and the payment of a promise of price and a transaction from which either of these is absent is not a sale at all.

In all the rulings cited as apparently contradictory there was a transfer of ownership made in the prescribed manner which is the first of the two essentials of a sale. But in every case in which there was a promise of payment it is held that the second essential of a sale is present and the whole definition is satisfied whether that promise was subsequently kept or broken. So also in each case in which there was neither payment nor promise it is held that the second essential is absent and the definition is not satisfied.

The sale-deed in the present case recites that the vendees have already spent a thousand rupees on the vendor's litigation and the vendor has "this day" received another thousand rupees and deposited the money with vendees for defraying the further costs of the same litigation. The deed then purports to make a transfer of ownership for a price paid and not for a price promised or part-paid and part-promised. It has already been found that there was no payment of the price or of any part of it, so that neither alternative of the second essential of a sale is present. The transaction does not, therefore, satisfy more than half the definition of a sale and is not a sale at all.

The transaction is also undoubtedly void under section 6 (h) (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, read with section 23 of the Contract Act, and probably also on the ground of fraud. The purchasers were buying property in litigation worth more than twenty-five thousand rupees for two thousand from a young Kunbi five weeks after his eighteenth birthday. The chance of success in the suit was more than good when the suit was filed and it had become a practical certainty on the day on which the sale-deed was executed. The cost of that litigation was actually Rs. 16 with whatever may have been paid to a pleader, and it was never likely to exceed three or four hundred rupees but the plaintiff himself has stated that he never had any intention of paying anything more than what the actual costs might amount to. There are also other circumstances proving that the transaction was of such a champertous nature that its object must be regarded as immoral and opposed to public policy.

There is also much evidence to support the vendor's statement that he signed the deed on a fraudulent representation by the plaintiff that it was a deed of quite another sort. It is, however, unnecessary to go into those matters. There was no sale because there was neither payment nor promise of the price and the plaintiff's suit was rightly dismissed. The appeal will accordingly be dismissed and the plaintiff-appellant will be ordered to pay all the costs in both Courts.

—RESPONDENT.

Madras Impartible Estates Act (II of 1904), s. 4—Personal decree against predecessors-in-title of proprietor—Estate, when liable to be proceeded against in execution—Legal necessity.

Under s. 4 of the Madras Impartible Estates Act, before any part of an impartible estate can be taken in execution of a decree for a personal debt against the predecessor-in-title of a proprietor, it must be shown that the debt for which the decree was passed was such as would be binding upon an ordinary joint family estate when incurred by the managing member, in other words, that there was legal necessity for creating the debt.

Appeal against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Chittoor, dated 10th January 1922 in C. M. P. No. 52 of 1921 in E. P. No. 15 of 1921, in O. S. No. 19 of 1921.

Mr. A. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal that arises in execution of the decree in O. S. No. 19 of 1922 on the file of the Sub-Court of Chittoor. The appeal is by the son and legal representative of the late judgment-debtor the Raja of Kalhasti. The respondent is the decree-holder in the suit. The Raja having died, it was contended by his son and legal representative that the group of villages called Chembedu group could not be attached in execution of the decree as the assets of his father in his hands as they were part of the impartible estate of Kalhasti of which he was at the time the proprietor. It is not denied that this group of villages called Chembedu group forms part of the Kalhasti Zemindari and is governed by the Madras Impartible Estates Act, II of 1904. By section 4 of that Act it is enacted that, "the proprietor of an impartible estate shall be incapable of alienating or binding by his debts, such estate or any part thereof beyond his own lifetime unless the alienation shall be made, or the debt incurred, under circumstances which would entitle the managing member of joint Hindu family, not being the father or grandfather of the other co-parceners to make an alienation of the joint property, or incur a debt, binding on the shares of the other co-parceners independently of their consent." That section clearly governs the present case. Under that section before any part of the impartible estate of Kallhasti can be taken in execution of a decree for a personal debt against the predecessor-in-title of the present proprietor, it must be shown that the debt for which the decree was passed was such as would be binding upon an ordinary joint family estate when the debt was incurred by the managing member, in other words, that there was legal necessity for creating the debt. The question whether the successor is a son of the predecessor or any other co-parcener makes no difference whatever, for the section does away with the special obligation as between sons and grandsons and their fathers and grandfathers based upon the theory of pious obligation in the Hindu Law. It is clear, therefore, that, before the decree-holder in this case could attach the property and bring it to sale, it was incumbent on him to establish that the debt for which this decree was passed was a debt incurred for the necessity of the impartible estate itself.

There is at present no such proof on record. In fact, it is said that the decree was obtained for a sum of money which the father of the present Zemindar had obtained as a trustee of a temple and misapplied himself, the debt thus being practically the result of a breach of trust. Such a debt as that can hardly be treated as a debt binding upon the successor-in-title to the Zemindari for it would not be a debt which, if incurred by the managing member of a joint Hindu family, would be binding upon the other-co-parceners.

It was very strenuously pressed on us that a fresh opportunity should be given to the decree-holder respondent to prove in the lower Court that this debt had the character of being one that would bind the co-parceners if it had been incurred by the managing member; but knowing the nature of the debt so far as it appears from the record, there is hardly any room for doubt as to its character. Furthermore, if the decree-holder had intended to put forward any case under section 4 of the Impartible Estates Act, he should have done so in the first instance in the lower Court. He should have stated that, though the property attached was Zemindari property, the debt for which the decree was obtained was binding on the Zemindari estate, because it was incurred for proper and legal necessity. He never put forward a case like that and we do not think that he should be given any fresh opportunity in the matter.

The Subordinate Judge has given a decision in favour of the decree-holder on grounds which we are unable to follow. He says that the income from the trust funds were blended with the income from the Zemindari and for some reason or other the debt resulting from the management of the trust property should be held binding on the Zemindari estate. It is very difficult to follow this argument; whatever blending there might have been between the income of the impartible estate and that of the trust funds, the decree-holder will only be able to proceed against such blended income and cannot possibly get any right to proceed against the impartible estate itself.

The Sub-Judge has also relied on certain cases where it was held that an impartible Zemindari in the hands of the legal representative of the deceased former Zemindar should be treated as his assets for the purpose of realising the debts of that Zemindar. He has quoted Zemindar of Kallhasti v. Achiguda (1), and Depuru Kalappa v. Umade Rajulu (2), as authorities in favour of his view, but he has not noticed that these authorities are no longer of any value after the passing of the Impartible Estates Act, which is now conclusive on the question of the liability of an impartible estate as regards debts incurred by the previous holder of the estate.

In these circumstances, we must set aside the order of the Sub-Judge and declare that the A schedule properties are not liable to be attached and that the attachment levied on schedule A properties should be set aside. The appellant will have his costs of this appeal, and, as regards costs in the lower Court, each party will bear his own costs as directed by the Sub-Judge.

Execution Second Appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Badaun, dated the 31st of July 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which the two appeals before us arise are stated in the referring order of the 22nd June 1923. In substance they amount to this: by an appellate decree, the plaintiff in two pre-emption cases was given one month from the 27th of September 1921 within which to deposit certain money, if he desired to obtain the benefit of the decrees in his favour. The Civil Courts closed for the vacation in that year on the 30th of September and re-opened on the 4th of November. On that date the successful plaintiff made the deposit required by the decree. The Courts below have held that it was too late, more than thirty days having elapsed since the 27th of September 1921. There was authority of this Court for the view thus adopted. This is to be found in the case of Hriday Narain v. Alam Singh (1). The attention of the Courts below was not drawn to the fact that, since the decision above referred to a Bench of this Court, in the case of Reoti Ram v. Sita Ram (2), had arrived at a different conclusion. The matter has been referred to a Full Bench in order that these conflicting decisions may be re-considered. The position is so far an unfortunate one that in Reoti Ram's case (2), the attention of the Bench was not called to the decision in Hriday Narain's case (1), while, on the other hand, the decision in Reoti Ram's case (2) is founded upon an older decision of this Court which was not laid before the Bench which decided Hriday Narain's case (1). The older decision in question is the case of Debi Din Rai v. Muhammad Ali (3). We now find, moreover, that another Bench of this Court, in the case of Bisheshar Nark v. Sarul-ul-din (4) had held a deposit made under circumstances precisely similar to those which we are now considering to have been made in time. The question for determination is whether the deposit made by the plaintiff Muhammad Jan was or was not within time under the terms of the decree. We have no desire to discuss any question as to the powers of the Court to extend that time; nor do we hold that the case falls within the provisions of section 10 of the General Clauses Act. As regards the decisions of this Court there is clearly a preponderance of authority in favour of the plaintiff-appellant. The current of authority is broken only by the decision in Hriday Narain's case (1). The facts in that case were to this extent peculiar, that the deposit made by the plaintiff was not made actually on the first possible day after the reopening of the Courts, but one day later. It is true that a point was made in argument of the fact that, on the first available day, the Treasury where the deposit was required to be made was only open for one hour; but we do not know how far this circumstance may have affected the decision of the Hon'ble Judges. There are two cases of other High Courts which are, in our opinion, in point. In the case of Shooshi Bhushan Rudro v. Gobind Chander Roy (5) the Calcutta High Court, relying upon certain English cases, made the following observations:—

"The broad principle there laid down is that, although the parties themselves cannot extend the time for doing an act in Court, yet if the delay is caused, not by any act of their own, but by some act of the Court itself, such as the fact of the Court being closed, they are entitled to do the act on the first opening day."

They go on to remark that this principle had been affirmed in older cases of the same Court.

The same principle was laid down by another Bench of the same Court in the case of Pearry Mohan v. Ananila Charan (6), in which again two older cases are referred to. We desire to refer also to the case of Sambasiva Chari v. Ramasami Reddi (7). The significance of that case lies in the fact that the Hon'ble Judges repelled contentions based upon the statutory provisions of the Indian Limitation Act and of the General Clauses Act; but nevertheless held that there is a generally recognized principle of law under which parties who are prevented from doing a thing in Court on a particular day, not by any act of their own, but by the Court itself, are entitled to do it at the first subsequent opportunity. It is quite true that this case, as well as Shooshi Bhushan Rudro's case (5), was laid before the Bench of this Court which decided Hirday Narain's case. (1) The learned Judges there remarked that these cases have nothing to do with question then being argued before the Court.

Strictly speaking, this remark is correct, as the Hon'ble Judges were then dealing with a pre-emption decree prescribing a certain period for the doing of a certain act; but it does seem to us that the general principle affirmed in the Calcutta and Madras cases is applicable and is sound in law. In view of those considerations and, taking account of the fact that the general current of authority in this Court has been opposed to the decision in Hirday Narain's case (1), we think that that case should now be overruled and the law affirmed as settled by two previous decisions and one subsequent one. In our opinion the deposit tendered by Muhammad Jan, the plaintiff, on the 4th of November 1921 was in time under the terms of the decree and should have been accepted. We, therefore, allow these appeals, set aside the order of the Court below and dismiss the application of the defendants to have the decree of the 27th of September 1921 executed as a decree in their favour. The appellant will have his costs throughout. It will be for the plaintiff Muhammad Jan to make such further application to the Trial Court as he may be advised, if he desires to obtain execution of the decree in his favour.

GUPTA NAND BHARTHI v. HARI SHANKAR

Appeal against the decree in Civil Suit No. 53 of 1921 by the 2nd Sub-Judge, Raipur, dated 20th April 1923.

Sir B. K. Dose, Messrs V. Bose and P. N. Rudra, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—It appears that a decree at least in respect of the alleged loans of Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 700 should have been granted to the plaintiff as soon as the defendant put in his pleadings as he admitted his liability in respect of them both. He signed receipts for both these sums of money and there seems to have been much discussion and argument over the question of the invalidity of these receipts "for want of consideration". A receipt is merely evidence of a fact. It is not an agreement requiring consideration to make it a valid contract.

[After discussing the facts the learned A. J. C. concluded as follows :—]

The appeal is dismissed and the defendant-appellant will pay all the costs of both parties in this Court. It may be added that no reason has been stated in the judgment of the lower Court for not allowing the plaintiff the full amount he had to pay on account of the cloth to the seller of it who obtained a decree against him, nor can I imagine any reason. It is hard, if not impossible, to decide any case properly unless the issues are carefully framed to cover only the points of difference between the parties and to cover each point once only. Half a dozen issues at the most would have done that here, but the learned Judge who decided the case was not satisfied with the thirteen framed by his predecessor but added ten more.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Bulandshahr, dated the 11th of August 1923.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought for possession of the site of a house by removal of the materials standing thereon. The main question in the case was one of fact whether the plaintiffs were or were not the owners of the land. Both the Courts below have decreed the claim holding that the plaintiffs' title is fully established. The lower Appellate Court has found as follows : "From the voluminous documentary evidence referred to in the judgment of the lower Court it was conclusively proved that plaintiff No. 1, who is respondent No. 1, was the purchaser of all the rights of the appellant in Sarai Goshain, a Mohalla in which the house in dispute was situated, and the plaintiff No. 2 was the auction-purchaser of the rights of the other zemindar Tikam Bharti in this house and, therefore, neither the appellant nor the other zemindar had any right left in themselves in respect of the site or the materials." It is contended on behalf of the defendant-appellant that the Court below has drawn wrong inference from the documentary evidence on the record. The Court of first instance had set forth the documentary evidence in detail and showed that the house in dispute was mentioned as item No. 17 in the sale certificate which was granted after an execution sale on the basis of a simple money decree in 1916. It also referred to a number of other documents showing that the entire title had passed to the plaintiffs and nothing had remained with the defendants. It is, however, contended on behalf of the appellant that, when a number of documents have to be construed, the question as to what proper inference can be drawn from them is one of law and not of fact and can, therefore, be gone into in second appeal. Reliance is also placed on the case of Mathar Singh v. Rambaz Singh (1), and it is urged that in that case the learned Judges went into the whole of the evidence on the ground that the findings, which were apparently those of fact, were not based on evidence but upon evidence which had been misread or misunderstood. It may be possible to distinguish that case on the ground that the question of fact raised in that second appeal was one which had nowhere been put up as a plea in the written statement. That was a circumstance which very probably influenced the learned Judges in going through the evidence once again. However that may be, I am bound by the recent pronouncement of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of The Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. v. Uma Charan Mandal (2) where it was laid down that, "where documents admitted in evidence upon that question are really historical materials, and although they have to be construed, and if possible understood, they are not to be treated as involving issues of law merely because they have to be construed. It is not as though they were being construed as instruments of title, or were contracts or statutes, or otherwise the direct foundation of rights." It cannot be suggested that the sale certificate referred to by the Court of first instance which expressly contains a recital that the house now in dispute was sold, has in any way been misconstrued. The learned Vakil for the appellant also is not able to show which of the particular documents referred to by the first Court has been wrongly interpreted. The question really is not one of misinterpretation of any document or documents of title but one of inference of fact from voluminous documentary evidence. I am, therefore, of opinion that the question, being one primarily of fact, cannot be challenged in second appeal. The appeal is without force and is hereby dismissed.

An Official Receiver has no power to make an order in a claim petition. It is not a power which has been delegated to him under section 80 of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

of 1920), presented against the order of the Official Receiver, dated the 21st November 1920, and made in M. P. No. 126 of 1920 in I. P. No. 9 of 1919.

Messrs. B. Sitarama Rao and S. R. Muthuswamy Aiyar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Patanjali Sastri and C. S. Rama Rao Sahib, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is from an insolvency proceeding before the District Judge of Madura. The Official Receiver seems to have made an attempt to sell certain properties to which the appellant before us put forward a claim that such properties belonged to him and not to the insolvent and should not be sold. These properties were included in a mortgage-deed obtained by the respondent against the insolvent. Strangely enough, the Official Receiver thought that he had power to dispose of the claim petition like that and, thinking that a prima facie title had been made out by the claimant, he passed an order releasing the properties from sale, holding that the properties belonged to the claimant. On this the mortgagee decree-holder, conceiving that he was somehow or other aggrieved by the order, put in an appeal to the District Judge. The District Judge thereupon came to the conclusion, and rightly in our opinion, that the secured creditor, the mortgagee decree-holder, was not in any way bound by any proceedings taken by the Official Receiver in the matter. But he thought, at the same time, that the effect of the order, if allowed to stand, would be to deprive the secured creditor of his right of sale which conclusion we are unable to follow. The secured creditor undoubtedly was not at all affected by the order of the Official Receiver.

On that, the District Judge proceeded to allow the appeal petition before him and set aside the order of the Official Receiver without deciding whether the property actually belonged to the claimant or to the insolvent. The form of the order which was drawn up proceeded further and it declared that the claim petition put in by the claimant do stand dismissed. The effect of that order, if left standing, must necessarily be that the property should be treated as the insolvent's and not as the claimant's, a position which the District Judge did not arrive at in his judgment.

We think that the whole of the proceeding is misconceived. In the first place, the Official Receiver had no power to make any order on a claim petition. It is not a power which has been delegated to him under section 80 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920. If the claimant wanted to prevent the sale of the properties as belonging to the insolvent, he should have applied to the District Judge direct to take action under section 4 of the Act. He did not do so. That being so, we must set aside all the proceedings in the lower Court and leave the parties in status quo ante. The claimant, if he finds that the Official Receiver either at his own instance or at the instance of any creditor, proposes to sell the properties which he claims to be his, may, if so advised, apply to the District Judge under section 4 of the Act for a proper order to be passed.

We, therefore, allow the appeal and set aside all the proceedings in the lower Court and direct each party to bear his own costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Purchases made in names of members—Presumption—Purchase made by stranger—Wakf—Dedication, proof of—Installation of idol or construction of temple, whether necessary.

Where there is a nucleus of joint family property and purchases are thereafter made in the names of different members of the family, then, in the absence of evidence to show that the purchases are made by the members out of their separate funds, they must be treated as joint family property.

SARAB SUKH DAS v. RAM PRASAD

A purchase made in the name of a stranger, however, is prima facie a purchase made by him for his own use.

Under the Hindu Law the actual installation of idols or the construction of a temple is not absolutely necessary for validating a deed of wakf made for such a purpose. [p. 1021, col 2.]

Chatarbhuji v. Chatarjit, 8 Ind. Cas. 832; 33 All. 253; 8 A. L. J. 34; Bugati Nath v. Ram Lal, 8 Ind. Cas. 642; 37 Cal. 128; 10 C. L. J. 355; 14 C. W. N. 18, relied on.

The name given to a deity is only a sacred convention. The deity is supposed or believed to exist from eternity. The idol is virtually treated as a visible symbol of the deity in whose favour the dedication is made or by whom the purchase is to be effected; and the mere fact that the installation takes place afterwards does not affect the validity of the dedication or of the purpose for which the purchase is made. [p. 1022, col. 1.]

A certain village was purchased in the name of an idol and the income derived from the village was used for the purposes of worship of the idol and other charitable purposes. Idols bearing the name mentioned in the sale-deed were also purchased, but there was no formal installation of the idols and no temple was built for them;

Held, that there was a sufficient dedication of the village to the idol and the village had become wakf property.

First appeal against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Moradabad, dated the 21st November 1919.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Panna Lal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and Badri Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was instituted by the plaintiff-respondent for the partition of a one-third share of certain property, comprising landed property, houses and moveables. The parties are descended from one Sewa Ram, who died about 40 or 45 years ago, leaving two sons, Bhagwan Das and Gobardhan Das. The plaintiff is the grandson of Bhagwan Das. His father, Dharam Das, died in 1904, while Bhagwan Das was alive. One of the defendants was Gobardhan Das who died during the pendency of the suit. The other defendants were the descendants of Bhagwan Das.

The first question for consideration in this appeal is, whether the property in dispute was joint family property, and whether there had been any partition in the family at or about the time alleged by the defendants.

The allegation of the plaintiff was that the property in dispute was joint family property and that the defendants were refusing to make a partition. The defendants pleaded that the villages, Ram Dandi and Gher No. 5 mentioned in the schedule attached to the plaint, were wakf property, endowed for the purpose of a temple to be constructed in the latter and that, excepting house No 10, the rest of the property was their separate property. They further pleaded that Bhagwan Das had separated from Gobardhan Das about 40 years ago and that Dharam Das, the father of the plaintiff, had similarly separated from his father, Bhagwan Das, about 20 years later.

The Court below found that the family lived jointly till about 4 or 5 years before the institution of the suit, that there had been no partition, and that the entire property in dispute excepting the moveables, the existence of which was not proved, was property divisible between the parties.

The evidence produced by the defendants on the latter point is, as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, very unsatisfactory. On the other hand, several respectable witnesses have been examined on behalf of the plaintiff to prove that the family was joint. One of them, Mohan Lal, is an Honorary Magistrate who pays Rs. 2,000 as revenue and Rs. 1,800 as income-tax. He states that Bhagwan Das and his sons formed a joint family and had a joint business and he supports his statement by producing the entries in his account books which go to show that there were money dealings between him and the firm styled Bhagwan Das-Gobardhan Das which belonged to the parties. He also states that at times Ram Prasad, the plaintiff, and Makhan Lal and others used to come to get money from the firm and to repay the same. He further states that to his knowledge there was never a partition in the family and that when the sister of the plaintiff was married, the entire arrangement in connection with the marriage was made and the expenditure connected therewith met by Gobardhan Das and the other members of the family.

Another witness, Tika Ram, who pays Rs. 26 as income-tax states that Bhagwan Das and Gobardhan Das were joint, that the plaintiff Ram Prasad used to get expenses from the family shop, which was managed by Gobardhan Das and that some of the defendants and their sons used to work in that shop.

Another witness, Ramji Mal, a physician, similarly deposes that Bhagwan Das and Gobardhan Das formed a joint Hindu family and that whenever he went on a professional visit, Gobardhan Das and Sarab Sukh Das paid his fee for his attendance.

The statements of these witnesses are corroborated by certain documentary evidence produced in the case. There is, for instance, a copy of a plaint in a suit filed by Gobardhan Das in 1907 for the recovery of money due by certain debtors of the firm. After the institution of that suit an application was made by Bhagwan Das and his two sons, who were then alive, and by the present plaintiff under the guardianship of Bhagwan Das, stating that they were living jointly with Gobardhan Das and that they should be added as co-plaintiffs. This application was allowed, and Bhagwan Das and his sons, Daulat Ram and Sarab Sukh Das, and his grandson, the present plaintiff, were brought on the record. This could not evidently have been done without the consent of the then plaintiff Gobardhan Das. Again, in 1916 the sister of the plaintiff was married and an application was made by Gobardhan Das for permission to take a procession through the streets and for the use of fire-works in connection therewith. In that application he described the sister of the plaintiff as "his daughter." It is not possible to attach much significance to the use of the words "his daughter" in that petition, but from the fact that the application was made by Gobardhan Das, there is reason to think that he was taking an active and leading part in the affair, or, in other words, such a part as would ordinarily be taken by the head or manager of a family in connection with the celebration of a marriage in it. Further, an extract from the Income-tax Register for 1916-1917 has been produced, showing that the present plaintiff and Sarab Sukh Das, Daulat Ram and Gobardhan Das were jointly assessed to income-tax with reference to the income derived from the Sugar-cane Press and houses held by the family.

There is also the evidence of Mohan Lal showing that the firm of Bhagwan Das, Go-bardhan Das used to take monies from time to time from him.

There is, further, on the record a decree which was jointly obtained by Gobardhan Das, Sarab Sukh Das and Daulat Ram against a certain debtor in 1915. The plaintiff was not a party to that decree; but from the fact that the other members of the family were co-plaintiffs with Gobardhan Das there can be no room for doubt that the entire family continued to work jointly till at least 1916.

On behalf of the defendants reliance has been placed on a written statement filed by Sarab Sukh Das and others in 1919 in which they stated that Bhagwan Das and Gobardhan Das were proprietors of the firm styled Bhagwan Das and that they had no concern with the firm. But the object of their disclaiming any connection with that firm obviously was to disavow any responsibility for any liability incurred by the firm and much weight cannot, therefore, be attached to that statement. In connection with the same suit Gobardhan Das was examined and in the statement which he then made he said that Bhagwan Das was his sharik and brother. That statement is inconclusive and does not necessarily support the defence. On a consideration of the entire evidence we are of opinion that the Court below has come to a right conclusion in holding that the plaintiff was living jointly with the other members of the family including Gobardhan Das. In fact, the father of the plaintiff had died, while the plaintiff was still a minor. He was brought up by his grandfather. The family carried on a joint business in which he took some part in getting money from and making payments to other firms; and the statement of the defendants that a partition had taken place; that Dharam Das had separated 20 years ago from his father, and that Bhagwan Das had separated from Gobardhan Das, cannot be trusted.

As regards the property in dispute, some of the purchases were made in the name of one member of the family and others in the name of another member of the family, but, as the family was joint at the time the purchases were made, the presumption is, that they were made with joint family funds. No reliable evidence has been adduced on behalf of the defendants to establish that the purchases made in the names of the different members of the family were made out of their separate earnings; and in the absence of any evidence, the entire property so purchased must be treated as joint family property.

The case of the village Ram Dandi, however, stands on a different footing. It was purchased on the 30th June 1906 in the name of Sri Lachmi Narainji, an idol said to have been installed in a temple situated in one of the houses at Chandausi. The purchase was made for a sum of Rs. 5,000 and the greater portion of the consideration was applied to the payment of a debt due to Sarab Sukh Das and of certain other debts due to certain other persons by vendor. There is no evidence to show when the debts were paid; but as the sale-deed stands in favour of, and in the name of Sri Thakurji, known as Sri Lachmi Narainji Maharaj, the presumption that any purchase made in the name of any member of the joint family would be deemed to have been made with joint family funds, would not be applicable. A purchase made in the name of a stranger is prima facie a purchase made by him for his own use. There is evidence to show that in 1895 three idols had been obtained through an official attached to the Rangaji temple of Brindaban and that the expenses of the purchase of those idols were met by the firm of Bhagwan Das-Gobardhan Das. The idols were made of copper and weighed two maunds sixteen seers. They were, according to the evidence of Mohan Lal, placed in a certain shop, from which they were removed about 18 or 19 years ago to house No. 3, where they still exist. The intention of the family evidently was to build a separate temple for the installation of those idols but no temple appears to have been built for the purpose. During the pendency of the suit Gobardhan Das executed a tamlak-nama by which he disposed of the greater portion of his property in favour of Sarab Sukh Das, and a deed of wagf, by which he dedicated one-fourth of the house, entered as No. 5 in the plaint, and a one-fourth share of the income of the village Kulaha; the former for the construction of the temple there and the latter for the expenses of its upkeep. In the deed of wagf he stated that an oral dedication had already been made of the gher previously by him and his brother Bhagwan Das. But no evidence has been produced in support of that statement. The effect of the present suit was to create a separation in the family and thereby to give power to Gobardhan Das to dispose of his share in the family property in any way he thought proper. The wagf cannot, therefore, operate except as regards his share of gher No. 5 and of the village Kulaha. As regards the village Ram Dandi the defendants have produced certain account-books, beginning from the 26th September 1906 and ending with the 8th August 1918, wherein the income of the village and the expenses incurred in connection with the temple are detailed. The account-books purport to be in the handwriting of Sarab Sukh, who was not produced; but the evidence of Mohan Lal proves that they were maintained in the ordinary course of business by Sarab Sukh who was in charge of the endowed property. The account-books show that the entire income derived from the village Ram Dandi was applied to the maintenance of the worship of the idols installed in the house and charitable relief. They further go to show that the village, Ram Dandi, had all along been treated as wagf property and that neither Bhagwan Das nor any of his descendants even objected to the use of the income for the purposes aforesaid. If the village Ram Dandi had had been joint family property, it is obvious that the income derived from that village would have been brought into the family hotch-pot and used for family purposes. That was not, however, the case. That village must, therefore, be treated as a wagf property purchased for the benefit of Sri Lachmi Narainji Maharaj, that is, the deity who was to be subsequently installed in a temple to be constructed for his use.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that there could be no valid and effective wagf because no temple was actually built and no idols were set up. But, as has already been pointed out, the family had obtained idols to be set up bearing the name borne in the sale-deed, and the income which was derived from the village purchased in his name was used for the purposes of worship and other charitable purposes. In fact, the actual installation of idols or the construction of a temple is not absolutely necessary for validating a deed of wagf made for such a purpose. In Chatarbhuj v. Chatarjit (1) where by a deed of gift certain zemindari property was expressed to be given to an idol, which was not at the time of execution in existence, and possession of the property was made over to a certain person as pujari, it was held that the deed was valid and created a trust in favour of the idol. In Bhupati Nath v. Ram Lal (2) it was similarly held that the principle of Hindu law which invalidates a gift other than to a sentient being capable of accepting it, does not apply to a bequest to trustees for the establishment of an image and the worship of a Hindu deity after the testator's death, nor does it make such a bequest void." The name given to a deity is only a sacred convention. The deity is supposed or believed to exist from eternity. The idol is virtually treated as a visible symbol of the deity in whose favour the dedication is made or by whom the purchase is to be effected; and the mere fact that the installation takes place afterwards, does not affect the validity of the dedication or of the purpose for which the purchase is made.

It only remains to consider how far the properties entered in the deed of wagf executed by Gobardhan Das on the 18th September 1918 were partible. Both the gher and the village Kulaha must be treated as joint family property because they were purchased in the name of some member of the family or another when the family was joint. The family purchased an old ancestral house and carried on certain sugar-cane pressing business. It possessed the nucleus round which the acquisitions could grow; and in the absence of any evidence to show that these purchases were made by any member or members of the family out of separate funds, they must necessarily be treated as joint family property. But the effect of the institution of the present suit for partition was to create a separation between Ram Prasad and the other members of the family, and Gobardhan Das had, therefore, a right under the Hindu law to dispose of his share of the property. The wagf is, therefore, valid so far as his half share of the said property is concerned.

In the plaint originally filed, the plaintiff had claimed a one-sixth share, but on the death of Gobardhan Das, he amended the plaint and claimed to own a one-third share in the entire property. The Court below has rightly awarded a one sixth share to him. The claim of the plaintiff ought, therefore, to be allowed in respect of the said one-sixth share except in regard to the village Ram Dandi and a half share of the village Kulaha and gher No. 5 comprised in the wagf of the 18th September 1918.

The appeal is allowed in so far that the decree for partition granted by the Court below will be confined to the property other than the village Ram Dandi and a half share of gher No. 5 and of the village Kulaha mentioned in the deed aforesaid. It will be open to the defendants when a partition is effected to remove the idols lying in house No. 3 to such place as may be constructed for their reception either in that portion of gher No. 5 which may be allotted to them or in such other place as they think proper. Subject to these reservations, the decree of the Court below will be confirmed. The plaintiff shall get 5/6ths of his costs and the defendants 1/6th of their costs throughout.

Second appeal against the decree of the 1st Additional Judge of Gorakhpur, dated the 17th March 1922.

Mr. Hamid Hasan, for the Appellant.

The Respondent was not represented.

JUDGMENT.—The question for consideration in this appeal is whether in the case of a joint occupancy holding belonging to four brothers and mortgaged by some of them with possession in favour of another person, one of the brothers, who was not a party to the mortgage, can get back possession of the entire holding without paying the mortgage-money on the ground that such a mortgage was invalid. The Court of first instance gave a decree for joint possession with the mortgagees; but the lower Appellate Court decreed the entire suit. In Bahoran Upadhyaya v. Uttamgir (1), it was held that a mortgagor of an occupancy holding, who had put the mortgagees in possession, could not recover back possession upon the ground merely that the mortgage was void under the provisions of the N.-W. P. Tenancy Act (II of 1901) without repaying to the mortgagee the money which he had received from him. In Ramsan v. Bhukhal Rai (2), it was similarly held that though a usufructuary mortgage of an occupancy-holding was void under section 20 of the N.-W. P. Tenancy Act, the mortgagor could get back possession on his paying the mortgage-money. A mortgagor is estopped from denying the validity of the mortgage after having received the consideration thereof from the mortgagee. Similarly a joint occupancy-tenant who wants to repudiate a mortgage made by his co-tenant can get back possession of his share, but cannot repudiate the mortgage made by his co-sharers without paying the mortgage-money realised by the latter by virtue of the mortgage from the mortgagee. To allow him to do so would in effect amount indirectly to allowing his co-sharer to re-sile from the mortgage and getting back possession without re-paying the money taken by him from the mortgagee under the cloak of the plaintiff's joint right. The appeal is, therefore, allowed with costs here and in the lower Appellate Court and the decree of the lower Appellate Court amended in so far that the plaintiff will not be able to get possession of the three-fourths share of the mortgagees without the payment by him or the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 of the mortgage-money due to the defendants Nos. 5 to 6. In other respects the decree of the lower Appellate Court will stand confirmed.

Mortgage—Redemption—Mortgagee failing to deliver possession of entire mortgaged property—Mesne profits, liability to pay.

On redemption a mortgagee is bound to hand over to the mortgagor the property of which he got possession in the capacity of mortgagee and in no other capacity. If he claims to have become a co-sharer in the property during the pendency of the mortgage, the proper procedure is for him to hand over to the mortgagor the whole quantity of the lands of which he obtained possession as mortgagee and then to settle with the mortgagor as to which portion should be handed back to him as representing his share.

If the mortgagee fails to deliver possession of the lands of which he obtained possession in the capacity of mortgagee he will be liable to pay mesne profits to the mortgagor.

GANESHI LAL v. NOBIN CHANDRA BOSE

Mr. S. A. Hridayar, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts which have given rise to this second appeal are these : The appellant and some others, on whose behalf the appellant has appealed, obtained two mortgages of certain shares in a patti of 4 annas. Subsequently, it is not clear whether after the redemption of the mortgages or before the redemption, the mortgagees purchased a small share (6 p.) out of the patti. The mortgages were redeemed. After the mortgage the appellants obtained possession over certain plots of land. Presumably this possession was obtained as mortgagees and on behalf of the mortgagors. The dispute arose when the mortgage was redeemed. The mortgagees refused to give up the lands over which they were in possession as mortgagees. Their contention was that they had become co-sharers in the lands and they were entitled to keep possession as co-sharers.

The Courts below gave a decree for joint possession to the plaintiffs and also a decree for mesne profits. The plaintiffs have not appealed. The contentions of the appellant are (1) that there should have been no decree for joint possession, and (2) that there should have been no decree for mesne profits.

On the first point it seems to us clear that the mortgagees were bound to hand over the lands of which they got possession, in the capacity of mortgagees, and in no other capacity. When the share was redeemed the whole quantity of land should have been handed back to the mortgagors. After that act had been performed it was for the parties to settle between themselves, if possible, what lands out of these should be handed back to the mortgagees as representing a fair share of theirs. The mortgagees were not at all entitled to keep possession simply because they had become co-sharers in the patti. In this view the possession of the mortgagees over the lands which they have got in the capacity of mortgagees was unlawful. The decree for joint possession was, therefore, a very proper one.

On the second point the learned Counsel for the appellant has cited to us the case of Sarbjit Singh v. Raj Kumar Roy (1). In our opinion that case is quite distinguishable. It was a case in which certain admittedly joint lands were held by tenants and after the tenants left one of the co-sharers took possession of those lands. The defendants in the case were entitled to take possession of those lands as co-sharers in the village. In the present case, as we have already said, the mortgagees were bound to hand over the entire quantity of land they had taken possession of as mortgagees. In our opinion, the Courts below might have given a decree for possession and not only a decree for joint possession. The decree for mesne profits, therefore, was perfectly correct.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs which will include in this Court fees on the higher scale.

GANESH LAL v. NOBIN CHANDRA BOSE

JUDGMENT—The property claimed by the plaintiff-appellant is 5/6ths of a certain property once owned by one Musammal Chanda. She mortgaged the whole of it in 1914 and died a year later. She left her surviving two heirs her mother Mt. Nasiban and her son Siddiq. The son was a minor. The mother sold the entire property in 1915 to the respondent No. 1 in this appeal for a sum of Rs. 500. She received in cash a sum of Rs. 100 and left with the transferee the sum of Rs. 400 for the purpose of payment of the mortgage which had been executed by Mt. Chanda in 1914. Siddiq attained majority sometime in 1919 and in 1921 sold the property to the appellant. The appellant brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for recovery of 5/6ths of the property being the share of Siddiq in it.

The Court of first instance held that the appellant was entitled to recover the 5/6ths of the property but subject to payment of 5/6ths of the sum of Rs. 400 that went to pay off the mortgage created by Mt. Chanda.

The learned Additional District Judge reversed the decree and dismissed the suit in toto. He held that the suit was barred by time. He also recorded a finding to the effect that, in any case, the appellant could not succeed without paying 5/6ths of a sum Rs. 900, and not of a sum of Rs. 400 only.

Two points have been urged before us in this appeal. First, it has been contended that the act of the mother Nasiban could not bind the son Siddiq at all. It is urged that it is immaterial whether there was any necessity for the sale or not. The second point that has been urged is that the suit was not time-barred. Taking the second point first. It appears that the sale having been made in 1915 the suit was amply within time for the ejectment of the purchaser.

To take up the first. The point raised is really concluded by the judgment of the Privy Council in Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1). As we read the judgment, their Lordships have authoritatively laid it down that a guardian of a Muhammedan minor who is not a guardian under the law is a pure and simple out-sider, or fazuli as he has been described, and he cannot bind the property of the minor by any act of his whether there be any necessity or benefit to the minor. In view of this Privy Council case it is not necessary to go into any of the rulings of this Court in which it may have been held that a de facto guardian of a Muhammedan minor could bind his property by a transaction by which the minor has been benefited.

A third question arises in this case. It appears that there was a decree against Mt. Chanda and several other persons for the sale of certain properties. It has been found as a fact by the Court below that the property now in question was one of the properties dealt with by the decree. We have not got any copy of the decree on the record. It appears from the judgment that, besides the property in question in this appeal, there were other properties involved. It is clear that the whole of the liability for the decretal amount cannot be laid on the property in question. At any rate, the respondent No. 1 was bound to contribute to the extent of his own liability. The Court below, therefore, was not justified in holding as a matter of law that the appellant was bound to pay 5/6ths of the sum of Rs. 900. The Court of first instance allowed 5/6ths of Rs. 400 or a sum of Rs. 333-5-4. This decree the appellant accepts.

The result is that we allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore the decree of the Court of first instance with costs which will include fees on the higher scale.

Stuart, J.—In view of the fact that the plaintiff agrees to pay Rs. 333-5-4 to Babu Nobin Chandra Bose the question does not arise whether if he had insisted he would not have been able to escape all liability. I note that we are allowing the amount without expressing any opinion as to whether he is liable to pay under the law. We are allowing it because he agrees to pay it.

I concur in allowing the appeal with costs including fees on the higher scale.

The giving of notice is a condition precedent to the lawful exercise of the power of re-sale given by section 107 of the Contract Act and it is for the person exercising the power under the section to plead and prove that the notice was given and the condition precedent fulfilled. It is not enough to say that the purchaser has suffered no loss on account of the re-sale, inasmuch as where the legislature enacts a general rule its operation cannot be governed by such considerations as whether looking to the reasons which led the legislature to enact it, it is necessary to apply the rule or not in particular cases. The rule is expressed in unambiguous language and applied in every case where the facts to which it is intended to apply exist.

Application for revision of the order of the Small Cause Court, Jubbulpore, dated the 5th April 1923.

Mr. N. G. Bose, R. B., for the Applicants.

Mr. A. V. Khare, for the non-Applicant.

ORDER.—Although a case somewhat different from that in the plaint was put forward in the pleadings the application in this Court is argued on the bases of the claim as set forth in the plaint and ground 3 is not pressed.

It is admitted that the plaintiffs re-sold the goods in exercise of the power given by section 107, Contract Act, but it is pleaded that the fact that no notice to the defendants is proved is due to the defendants not having pleaded want of such notice. But as the giving of a notice was a condition precedent to the lawful exercise of the power it was for the plaintiffs to plead and prove that the notice had been given and the condition precedent fulfilled. The plaintiffs are, therefore, not entitled to a remand for the purpose of proving the notice.

It is next urged that, although the rule under section 107 requires notice, the absence of a notice does not affect the plaintiffs' claim. It is said that the object of the rule in requiring notice is that no unnecessary loss may be caused to the purchaser and that he may have an opportunity of taking the goods and paying up or of purchasing them at the re-sale. In the present case it is said there is no question of loss to the purchaser as it is not alleged that the rate at which the goods were re-sold was not a fair rate. Where the Legislature enacts a general rule its operation cannot be governed by such considerations as whether looking to the reasons which led the Legislature to enact it, it is necessary to apply the rule or not in particular cases. If it be held that a rule need not be applied if the mischief it sought to prevent is not likely to happen in a particular case, the applicability of the rule would depend upon the result of a preliminary investigation as to the likelihood of the mischief. Where the rule is expressed in unambiguous language it must be applied in every case where the facts which it is intended to apply exist. The application fails and is dismissed with costs.

BIJAI BAHADUR v. PARMESHWARI RAM

Where separate appeals preferred by two sets of defendants were accepted, and the plaintiff filed only one second appeal against the appellate decree but impleaded both sets of defendants as respondents to the appeal;

Held, that the second appeal was maintainable and that the failure to prefer two separate appeals was only a technical defect which could be overlooked, especially in view of the fact that both sets of defendants had been impleaded as respondents.

Gansham Singh v. Bhola Singh, 74 Ind. Cas. 411; 21 A. L. J. 465; (1923) A. I. R. (A.) 490; 45 A. 506, referred to.

Section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act applies only to a case where there is more or less forcible ejectment, it does apply when there is an ejectment by mutual consent. A suit by the heirs of a mortgagor to recover the mortgaged property from a stranger who has paid off the mortgagee is governed by Article 144 and not by Article 148 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 31st of January 1923.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Mangal Prasad Bhargava, U. S. Bajpai and S. K. Dar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this appeal Mr. Bajpai has taken a preliminary objection, namely, that the appeal is not maintainable. The point raised is rather difficult. I have, however, given it my best consideration.

The facts are these: The appellant's predecessor-in-title brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen. It was a suit for redemption to which eleven persons were made parties. It was distinctly stated in the plaint that the suit was really directed against defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and if the other defendants who had been made parties as a mere matter of form did not object, the plaintiff was not going to hold them liable either for costs of the suit or for damages. The suit succeeded in the Court of first instance and redemption was decreed on payment of a certain amount of money. Defendant No. 8 who was the original mortgagee filed a written statement but he nowhere said in it that the suit was liable to be dismissed in toto on any ground whatsoever. All that he asked for was that he should be allowed a certain amount of money in the case of redemption. From the decree passed in favour of the plaintiff there were two appeals before the first Appellate Court, one was appeal No. 220 of 1921. This was instituted by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5. The other appeal No. 228 of 1921 was filed by the defendant No. 8, Bhagirath Ram, who died pending the appeal. Defendants 1 to 5 had urged in their written statement that the suit was incompetent and should be dismissed. They pleaded limitation and raised other objections. In their grounds of appeal they repeated the plea of limitation. This plea succeeded in the Court of first instance. In the appeal filed by Bhagirath Ram he urged that he should have his money, but in the last ground of appeal he asked that the suit should be dismissed.

The Court of first appeal wrote a combined judgment allowing the appeal lodged by defendants Nos. 1 to 5. While concluding this judgment it said as follows: "Civil Appeal No. 228 of 1921 was instituted by the representatives of Bhagirath Ram who claimed half the consideration-money and he also asked that the appeal should be dismissed."

The appeal No. 228 was also allowed and the suit was ordered to be dismissed. The present appeal is against the decree passed in appeal No. 220 of 1921 which had been brought by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 only. But in this Court Bhagirath's heirs, namely, Bujhawan Ram, Lakhan Ram and Nand Kishor, have been impleaded.

Now, it is urged on behalf of the respondents that as no appeal has been lodged against the decree made in appeal No. 228 of 1921 this appeal is not maintainable.

On behalf of the appellant the case of Ghansham Singh v. Bhola Singh (1), recently decided by five learned Judges of this Court, has been cited and it has been urged that practically there is one decree and the mere fact that the formality of filing an appeal against the decree in appeal No. 228 of 1921 has not been gone through should not prejudice the present case. I think I ought to accept this argument of the learned Counsel for the appellant. I have already stated that the heirs of the defendant No. 8, Bhagirath Ram, are parties to the present appeal. It is not the case that an appeal has been lodged against only defendants Nos. 1 to 5 who alone were said to be in possession and were found to be in possession by the Court of first instance. If a separate appeal had been filed against the decree in appeal No. 228 of 1921 the same question would have arisen as would arise in the present appeal I have already mentioned that the defendant No. 8 never urged in his written statement that the suit should fail. In his grounds of appeal, too, he never urged the plea of limitation. Under the circumstances, I think we ought to look to what should operate substantial justice and should overlook the technical side of the question (if any).

(1) 74 Ind. Cas. 411; 21 A. L. J. 465, (1923) A. I. R. (A.) 490; 45 A. 506.

I do not think it necessary to discuss the Full Bench case, but I may point out that what was decided there was that a Court has to look to the substance of a thing rather than to the form. In my opinion, as the heirs of Bhagirath Ram are parties to this appeal they cannot in any way be prejudiced by the fact that no appeal was filed against the decree which they got in their own appeal. The appeal may, therefore, be argued on the merits.

JUDGMENT.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are shortly these: One Harcharan Singh was the proprietor of the disputed property which he lost, as a result of the execution of a decree against him, at an auction-sale held on 20th of May 1897. About a month later, on the 17th June 1897, he made the mortgage in question. By this mortgage he mortgaged with one Bhagirath Ram a small plot of land for the sum of Rs. 24. The auction-purchasers who are now represented by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 instituted two suits for redemption of certain mortgages executed by Harcharan Singh in the years 1886 and 1897. The suits for redemption did not include the mortgage now in question. The suits were referred to arbitrators for decision and they decided that the auction-purchasers should pay half of the amounts of the two mortgages of 1886 and 1887 and also half of the amount of the mortgage of 17th June 1897. The result was that, after the redemption, the auction-purchasers took possession of the mortgaged properties sometime in 1905. Harcharan Singh put in an objection in the Execution Department. His objection was rejected on 17th June 1905. The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by the son of Harcharan Singh for the redemption of the mortgage dated the 17th June 1897 as against the defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the auction-purchasers. In the plaint he said that the original mortgagee Bhagirath Ram and others were merely pro forma defendants.

The suit was resisted inter alia on the ground of limitation. This plea succeeded in the first Court of appeal. This is the only question for determination in this Court, namely, whether the Court below was right.

On behalf of the respondents it has been urged that either section 79 of the Tenancy Act applies or Article 144 of the Limitation Act applies, and in either case the suit is time-barred.

It is urged that the arrangement, through the arbitration, that was come to, between the auction-purchasers and Bhagirath, amounted to an ouster of Bhagirath from the land and the ouster of Bhagirath amounted to the ouster of Harcharan Singh who had become an ex-proprietary tenant of the mortgaged plot, he having lost, a month before, his title as zemindar. This argument does not appeal to me and for this reason, that section 79 appears to apply to a case where there is more or less forcible ejection and does not apply where there is an 'ejection' by mutual consent.

On the second point I think the respondents' contention should succeed. As I have already mentioned, the redemption suits did not relate to the mortgage in question. That, however, by itself, is not very important. In agreeing to pay half the money due on the mortgage of 17th June 1897 the auction-purchasers really purported to assume the rights of Harcharan Singh as an ex-proprietary tenant. They had no right of redemption. They usurped, as it were, that right. It cannot be said that by the redemption effected by means of the award, they became transferees or assignees of the mortgagee's rights. They claimed adversely to Harcharan Singh and in their own right. The redemption by the auction-purchasers was in defiance of all title as an ex-proprietary tenant that may have remained in Harcharan Singh. In this view Article 148, Schedule I of the Limitation Act would not apply. The suit, therefore, although framed as one of redemption, is really a suit for recovery of property against persons who had no right to hold that property with an offer to compensate them for such monies as they may have parted with.

I think that the decree of the Court below was right and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887) s. 158 (xvii)—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Suit to recover excess area allotted in partition, nature of—Question of title.

A suit to recover possession of a certain area of land on the allegation that the area in dispute had been allotted to the defendants at a partition of shamilat land in excess of the share to which they were entitled in accordance with the mode of partition agreed to by the parties and adopted by the revenue authorities, raises a pure question of title and is not excluded from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts by clause xvii of section 158 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Shahpur, at Sargodha, dated the 22nd March 1920, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Bhera, District Shahpur, dated the 23rd August 1919, and dismissing the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

Mr. Nank Chand, for the Appellant.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The parties to the suits out of which these two appeals have arisen belong to village Kohlian in the Bhera Tahsil of the Shahpur District. The village was admittedly divided into two tarafs, chahnda and lehnda. The former was again sub-divided into two pattis, namely, Duliani and Phuliani. Prior to 1907 the shamilat land of these two pattis was joint. On the 21st June 1907, one Sardara of Phuliani patti applied for partition of the joint shamilat. It was agreed between the parties to these proceedings that the partition would be effected on the basis of the revenue paid by each co-sharer as assessed in the Settlement then current. It appears that the revenue assessed on patti Duliani amounted to Rs. 303-15-0 and the patti was accordingly entitled to 281 bighas only of the shamilat land. The plaintiff's allegation is that when the partition proceedings were completed this patti was allotted 61 bighas more than what they were entitled to. These 61 bighas are alleged to have been taken out of the share of some of the proprietors of patti Phuliani. The Duliani patti was thus awarded 342 bighas to which they were clearly not entitled under the agreement arrived at between the parties. This allotment gave rise to two suits, one for possession of 1 bigha 2 kanals, and the other for possession of 17 bighas, 1 kanal, out of 61 bighas which were alleged to be in possession of the defendants in excess of their proper share. The Trial Court decreed both the suits, but the lower Appellate Court on appeal has held that the suits really related to the mode of partition, and, therefore, excluded from the jurisdiction of Civil Courts under section 158 of the Land Revenue Act. The suits having been dismissed the plaintiffs have now come up in second appeal to this Court, and the sole question for determination is whether the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to entertain these suits.

It has been argued by Mr. Nanak Chand on behalf of the appellants that there is a question of title involved in these cases, and that, therefore, section 158 of the Land Revenue Act has no application. This contention is, in my opinion, well founded and must prevail. The plaintiffs came into Court with a clear allegation that the defendants were not entitled to the 61 bighas which had been allotted to them in excess of their proper share, and that the plaintiffs were the owners thereof in accordance with the agreement which had been arrived at between the parties prior to the partition. No objection was made by the plaintiffs to the mode of partition, but, on the contrary, it was the right of the defendants to take possession of the land in suit that was disputed. In my opinion, the question, raised was purely one of title, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts was not barred under clause (xvii) of section 158 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act.

In Anwar v. Allah Yar (1), the plaintiffs, who were parties to certain partition proceedings, brought a suit in the Civil Courts for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to a certain portion of the shamilat land which had upon partition been allotted to them by the Revenue Officer. The defendants alleged that they had acquired the lands in suit by purchase. It was held that the question involved was one of title and that the Civil Courts had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. This case appears to me to be very much in point, and I hold that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts to entertain the claim is not barred.

I accept both appeals and, setting aside the order of the Court below, remand the cases for decision on the merits. Parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Code of 1908, but the final decree was passed after that Code came into force. The last application for execution of the decree was made after the expiry of twelve years from the date of the final decree ;

Held, that the execution of the decree was governed by the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and the application for execution was, therefore, barred by time.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a decree-holder's appeal. The suit in which the decree was passed, was based on a mortgage. The preliminary decree was passed on the 4th of May 1908. As on this date the new Code of Civil Procedure had not come into force the decree was passed under section 88 of the Transfer of Property Act. The final decree was obtained by the decree-holders on the 19th of August 1909, when the new Act had come into force. The last application for execution was presented after the expiry of 12 years from 19th August 1909. The question, therefore, arises whether this last application would be governed by the old Code of Civil Procedure or by Act V of 1908. If the old Code governed the case, the 12 years' limitation would not apply because the decree in the case is a mortgage-decree. If the new Code applies the application would be barred by time.

The learned Counsel for the appellants relies on the case reported in Koushia v. Ishri Singh (1). But in that case both the decrees under sections 88 and 89 of the Transfer of Property Act had been passed before the new Code of Civil Procedure came into force. In the case before us the only decree that is executable was passed under the new Code of Civil Procedure and, therefore, the rules of procedure laid down in that Code should apply.

The decree of the Court below seems to be right and the appeal is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 51 (1) O. XL, r. 1, O. XLIII, r. 1 (s)—Receiver, appointment of—Objection, dismissal of—Objector not party to suit—Appeal, whether lies—Execution of decree—Judgment-debtor dead—Receiver, whether can be appointed.

An order dismissing an objection to the appointment of a Receiver of property, the objector not being a party to the suit, falls under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is appealable at the instance of the objector under O. XLIII, r. 1 (s) of the Code.

The appointment of a Receiver is a form of execution under section 51 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Execution of a decree, whether by appointment of a Receiver or otherwise, cannot proceed against a judgment-debtor who is dead and whose representatives are not on the record;

Revision against the decree of the District Judge, Hoshangabad, in Civil Appeal No. 40 of 1923, dated the 30th April 1923.

Mr. G. L. Subhedar, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Non-Applicant, Defendant.

Order.—The facts of this case are peculiar, and the point they raise is difficult. It is necessary to go minutely into the facts in order to understand the case.

The present applicants filed two suits in the Court of the Sub-Judge, Hoshangabad, against four persons, the defendants being (1) The Secretary of State, (2) Raghunandan, the present non-applicant, (3) Madhusudandas and (4) Dayal. The suits were tried together. The facts were that defendants Nos. 3 and 4 jointly borrowed Rs. 1,170 from the plaintiffs, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being joined as they gave out that Madhusudandas was dead, and they were in possession of his property, this being apparently because the Police took possession of some of his property, and defendant No. 2 Raghunandan who was the malguzar of the village took possession of his absolute occupancy land. The plaintiffs asked for a decree against defendants Nos. 3 and 4, but if defendant No. 3 was dead, for a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2, they being in possession of Madhusudandas's property. Defendants 1 and 2 stated that they did not know whether Madhusudandas was alive or dead.

On the authority of Srinath Das v. Probodh Chunder Das (1), it was held that the suit would lie. A preliminary issue was framed, and the Court decided on 12th April 1923 that Madhusudandas was alive, and a decree was passed against defendants Nos. 3 and 4, defendants Nos. 1 and 2 being discharged from the suit.

In execution of this decree, an application was presented the same day by the plaintiffs for the attachment of Madhusudandas's absolute occupancy land. We are not concerned with defendant No. 4, Dayal, in this case. This land was ordered to be attached, and an application was made for the appointment of a Receiver, as the judgment-debtor had disappeared, and the malguzar, the present non-applicant, had taken possession. On 21st April 1923, the Court appointed a Receiver, and there was no appeal from this order. But two objections were put in by the non-applicant, one on 23rd April 1923 and the other on 26th April 1923, for the cancellation of the order appointing a Receiver. The first objection proceeded on the mistaken ground that the land was occupancy, which is not the case, it being absolute occupancy land. The second objection proceeded on the ground that Madhusudandas died before the institution of the suit, and so his suit was a nullity. The Court passed an order on 30th April 1923. It held that it was no longer open to Raghunandan Prasad to contend that the decree was obtained against the dead defendant and is, therefore, void, and the second point as to the abandonment of the land was held to fail, because the provisions of the Tenancy Act do not refer to absolute occupancy holding. The application was, therefore, dismissed but in accordance with the wishes of the decree-holder, Raghunandan Prasad himself was appointed Receiver instead of the person already appointed.

(1) 6 Ind. Cas. 244; 11 C. L. J. 580.

RAMSWARUP v. RAGHUNANDAN

Against this order the malguzar appealed, and the District Judge, Hoshangabad, set aside the order on the ground that execution could not proceed against a dead man, and ordered that the lower Court must enquire whether Madhusudandas is dead, and, if so, the decree-holder must proceed against his heirs or representatives. He, therefore, set aside the order appointing a Receiver and directed that an issue should be framed whether Madhusudandas is dead, and, if so, to direct the respondent decree-holder to correct his application for execution against Madhusudandas's heirs or representatives, and conduct execution proceedings in accordance with the law. The present application is presented for revision against this decree.

It is first contended that the malguzar not being a party to this suit cannot object to or appeal against the appointment of a Receiver, and, therefore, the District Judge's order is without jurisdiction, and in support of this contention a case of the Patna High Court, Inderdeo v. Gouri Shankar (2), is relied on. In that case a Receiver was appointed in execution of a mortgage-decree. The petitioner who was not a party to the suit objected to the Receiver taking possession of the property on certain grounds. The objection was overruled. The objector appealed to the High Court and also filed an application for revision, and it held that the objector, not having been a party to the suit, had no right of appeal. His application for revision was, however, considered.

This case appears to be in conflict with the ruling in Hudson v. Morgan, (3) in which it was held that where in a mortgage-suit a Receiver appointed by Court was directed to take possession of the property in custody of a person not a party to the suit, such an order was appealable. That case is under the old Code. The provisions of the present Code are, however, the same. The order appointing a Receiver was made under O. XL, r. 1, and is appealable under O. XLIII, r. 1, clause (s).

The case of Hudson v. Morgan (3), has been followed by the Patna High Court in Agabeg v. Musammat Sundari (4), which was decided only a week later than the case in 45 Indian Cases, referred to above. This case is of use because it might be contended that though an appeal will lie by a person whose property is affected by an order appointing a Receiver, the appeal made by the malguzar in present case was not an appeal against the order of appointment of a receiver, but against the order dismissing his objection to the appointment; and it has, as a matter of fact, been contended by the applicants in this case that the objection taken by the malguzar to the appointment was under O. XXI, r. 58, and, therefore, no appeal would lie, but a suit under O. XXI, r. 63. This contention must be overruled, because the rules under O. XXI refer expressly to objections to the appointment of a Receiver, which is provided for by a special Order, O. XL of the Civil Procedure Code. And the Patna case I have just quoted, Agabeg v. Sundari (4) is a clear authority for holding that an order dismissing an objection to the appointment of a Receiver of property, the objector not being a party, falls under O. XL, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, and is appealable. I hold, therefore, that an appeal will lie. It is quite true that there was a finding in the suit to which the malguzar was a party that Madhusudandas was alive at the time of the institution of the suit and that question cannot be re-opened. But taking that at its highest, it only amounts to a finding that Madhusudandas was alive at the date of the decree, which is dated 20th April 1923, and the decree, is, therefore, not a nullity.

It is now contended that Madhusudandas is dead and admittedly he has not been heard of for years and is not in the village. Execution cannot proceed against a judgment-debtor who is dead and whose representatives are not on the record, and it must be determined whether he is alive or dead before further proceedings can be taken. The appointment of a Receiver is a form of execution under section 51, clause (1) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Before any steps in execution, either by the appointment of a Receiver or otherwise, can be taken, the heirs of Madhusudandas, if he is dead, must be brought on record, whoever his heirs may be.

In these circumstances, the order of the lower Appellate Court must be upheld and the application for revision dismissed with costs.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Durga Prasad and S. C. Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question raised in this second appeal is whether the lower Appellate Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that only a part of the consideration of the promissory note, which was the basis of the suit, out of which this appeal arises, passed. The Court of first instance had relied on the presumption of the law that a promissory-note is executed for a consideration. The learned District Judge controverted this presumption on the fact that, as a matter of fact, at least a part of the consideration was not paid on the date the promissory-note was executed. He also admitted into evidence a certain statement of the executants of this promissory-note. It was contained in the sale-deed executed by them. By this sale-deed the executants left a part of the sale consideration for payment of the very promissory-note now in question. They said that only a sum of Rs. 700 was due to them on account of the promissory-note. The learned Judge thought that this statement was admissible under section 32 (2) of the Evidence Act. Without specifically deciding whether the statement was admissible under clause II or not we are clearly of opinion that the statement is admissible under section 32 (3). The evidence, therefore, that was admitted and the presumption that was raised by the Court below was not unjustified. The finding is clearly one of fact only and we do not think we are entitled to go behind it.

The result is that the appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs on the higher scale.

Second appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 27th April 1920, modifying that of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, Ludhiana, dated the 3rd November 1918, and granting the plaintiff a declaration to the effect that his mortgage shall be liable to redemption on payment to him by the defendants of Rs. 250 only.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellant.

Mr. Deo Raj Sawhney, for Mr. Kanwar Narain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal has arisen under the following circumstances: The land in suit belonged to one Mahan Singh, Granthi-Jagirdar. It was muafi in 1820. Mahan Singh made a gift of the land in favour of Brahm Narain and three other persons who resided in the Dharm sala Khanpur. Brahm Narain having died his chela Gobind Das succeeded to the land in 1848. Gobind Das then, on the 15th of November 1869, mortgaged the land to Duni Chand, the father of the plaintiff in this suit. The mortgage was with possession, and the mortgagee was to take the income in lieu of interest on the amount of Rs. 250, the mortgage-money. In 1873 the muafi was resumed and the land was assessed to revenue. In 1887 and later in 1899 the proprietors in the village brought suits to recover possession of the land from the mortgagee on the ground that Gobind Das had died and that the property had reverted to the proprietors of the village. Those suits were dismissed as it was not proved that Gobind Das had died. On the 6th of June 1918 the land in dispute was mutated in favour of the Dharm sala under the management of Hardit Singh and Dasondhi in consequence of a report to the effect that Gobind Das had died. Subsequently, on the 20th of June 1918, the above two persons filed an application in the Court of the Revenue Assistant, Ludhiana District, for the redemption of the mortgage under section 4 of Act II of 1913. On the 9th of July 1918 they succeeded in getting an order for redemption from the Revenue Court on payment of Rs. 250, the mortgage-money. Thereupon the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff, the son of the original mortgagee, for a declaration under section 12 of the Act. In the plaint it was stated that the defendants had no right to redeem the land because (a) Gobind Das, the original owner of the land, was still alive; and (b) the land in dispute was the private property of the said Gobind Das and the Dharm sala or the two lambardars had no concern therewith, nor was there any Dharm sala in existence. In the alternative, it was also alleged that even if Gobind Das had died so long as the Dharm sala would have no right to get the land. It was further alleged in the plaint that even if the Dharm sala or the two lambardars were entitled to redeem the land, they could only do so on payment of the mortgage-money as well as the land revenue which the plaintiff had been obliged to pay in consequence of the resumption of the muafi and the assessment of the land to revenue. The total amount claimed by the plaintiff was Rs. 3,400 which included interest on the revenue paid by the plaintiff at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum for 50 years.

On these pleadings two issues of fact arose, namely, (1) whether Gobind Das had died; and (2) whether the land was the private property of Gobind Das or it belonged to the Dharm sala. Upon both these questions of fact the decision of the Trial Court was against the plaintiff. That Court, however, held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim the amount of revenue which he had been obliged to pay and that he was entitled to recover it with interest. The Trial Court, therefore, allowed the amount of Rs. 562-8-0 on account of the land revenue and Rs. 1,117-12-9 on account of interest upon the revenue. It granted a declaration that the land could be redeemed on payment of Rs. 1,930-4-9.

Both parties were dissatisfied with the decision of the trial Court and both of them preferred appeals. The lower Appellate Court, has modified the decree of the Trial Court, and has held that the land was redeemable on payment of Rs. 250, the mortgage-money only, as decided by the Revenue Court. The decision of the Trial Court on the issues of fact as well as on the issue of law was challenged in the lower Appellate Court. That Court, however, agreed with the Trial Court in finding that Gobind Das had died. It also found that the mortgaged property belonged to the Dharmasala and was not the private property of the mortgagor Gobind Das, and that, therefore, Hardit Singh and Dasondhi, lambardars, who were the de facto managers of the Dharmasala, were entitled to redeem. On the question of liability to pay revenue on the land the Court came to the conclusion that, as the mortgagee had realised much more than would justly be due to him, the land had rightly been allowed to be redeemed on payment of Rs. 250 only.

The plaintiff has come up in second appeal. Mr. Badri Das on behalf of the appellant has questioned the findings of fact recorded by the lower Appellate Court as to the nature of the property in question, and as to the death of Gobind Das, mortgagor. In our opinion, the findings being findings of fact cannot be questioned in second appeal. As to the liability to pay the land revenue together with interest, the learned Vakil has cited a large number of authorities, and has contended that the present case comes within the purview of those rulings in which it has been held that where revenue on the mortgaged property has been enhanced and the mortgagee has been obliged to pay it, he is entitled to add the amount to the mortgage-money and claim it from the mortgagor. The trend of the authorities is in favour of the argument put forward by Mr. Badri Das. Here the land originally mortgaged was muafi land. Subsequently, in 1873, it was assessed to revenue. In principle there can be no distinction between the case of an enhancement of revenue and that of a fresh assessment of revenue. Therefore, the plaintiff was clearly entitled to the revenue which he was obliged to pay. In our opinion, however, he was not entitled to any interest. Reliance has been placed upon the provisions of section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. That Act, however, does not apply to this province. The terms of the mortgage-deed do not provide for any interest to be paid on sums spent by the mortgagee for the various purposes mentioned in section 72 of the Transfer of Property Act. We, therefore, do not think that it would be just to allow interest upon the amount of the revenue paid by the plaintiff. In coming to this conclusion we have taken into consideration the fact that, according to the admission of the plaintiff himself, the chakota of the land had been gradually increasing until it had risen to Rs. 125 per annum.

The result is that we accept the appeal so far as to hold that, in addition to Rs. 250, the mortgage-money, the plaintiff will also be entitled to Rs. 562-8-0 representing the amount of revenue paid by him from time to time. The total amount on payment of which redemption is to take place is, therefore, Rs. 812-8-0. The decree will be modified accordingly. We make no order as to costs.

A Muhammadan tenant-in-common cannot be held to be represented in partition proceedings by another Muhammadan tenant-in-common merely because their interests are identical.

Where, however, a co-sharer permits another person to continue recorded as a co-sharer in respect of property which belongs to the former and to participate in partition proceedings as a co-sharer, he is estopped from subsequently objecting to the proceedings on the ground that he was not a party to them or had no notice of them.

Second appeal from the decree of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, at Allahabad, dated the 8th February 1922.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmed, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENTS.

Stuart, J. :—This appeal is mainly on two points. The first is, whether certain partition proceedings in a Revenue Court were vitiated by the omission to issue fresh proclamation of the proceedings, and the second is whether even if those proceedings were regular the plaintiff-appellant is prevented from obtaining a relief under the provisions of section 233 of Local Act III of 1901. The facts in respect of the first point are these: A certain Wahaj-ud-din applied to the revenue authorities for partition of his share in a village in the Allahabad district. He put in this application in 1909. In the course of the proceedings two brothers, Meera Bakhsh and Aulia Bakhsh, who are recorded co-sharers of a two-pie share took certain objections to the partition which involved a question of proprietary title. These objections were decided against them and that decision became final. These objections were decided against them before March 1916. In March 1916 Wahaj-ud-din withdrew his application for partition and if this withdrawal had been accepted the whole of the partition proceedings would ordinarily have come to an end and there would have been no partition. The withdrawal was accepted as far as Wahaj-ud-din was concerned but almost directly another co-sharer Abdul Jalil who had been a party to the partition proceedings demanded that the partition should be allowed to go on and his request was acceded to. The partition was accordingly completed and finally sanctioned on the 10th of October 1917. The first point which we have to decide is, whether the acceptance of Wahaj-ud-din's withdrawal automatically brought proceedings to an end and necessitated the commencement of new proceedings with the issue of fresh notices and a complete cancellation of the previous proceedings. I am of opinion that, on the merits, there was no cessation of the proceedings and that the order of the presiding officer on Abdul Jalil's petition amounted in effect to a cancellation of the sanction to withdraw. The appeal, therefore, cannot succeed upon the first point.

The second point is more important and more difficult. The present plaintiff Karim Bakhsh is a younger brother of Aulia Bakhsh and Meera Bakhsh. He was a posthumous child being born after the death of his father Maula Bakhsh. Maula Bakhsh owned two-pie share in mauza Seondha. At his death this was recorded jointly in the names of his two existing sons Aulia Bakhsh and Meera Bakhsh. I am not in a position to say whether the entry was made before or after the birth of Karim Bakhsh. Karim Bakhsh was born about 1888 and had attained his majority before the partition proceedings commenced. His name was not recorded as that of a co-sharer at the time that the partition proceedings commenced and it was not so recorded till the 16th of August 1915 when Aulia Bakhsh died. Then the name of the plaintiff-appellant was recorded in place of Aulia Bakhsh in the revenue papers but he was not brought on as a party to the partition proceedings and he was never a party to the partition proceedings. The question which he wishes to re-open in the suit out of which this appeal arises is the very question of proprietary title which was decided against his brothers Aulia Bakhsh and Meera Bakhsh sometime in 1911. His case is that as he was not a party to the partition proceedings section 233 K has no application and that under the law as it is understood in this Court he has a perfect right to raise the matter now. Section 233 K can ordinarily only operate as against those recorded co-sharers who have been parties to the partition proceedings. The Courts below repelled the plaintiff-appellant's plea on the ground that, although his name did not appear, he was sufficiently represented by his order brothers. I doubt the soundness of this proposition. I do not see how a Muhammadan tenant-in common can be held to be represented by another Muhammadan tenant-in-common merely because their interests are identical. But I would agree with the Courts below in refusing the plaintiff-appellant any relief for a different reason. We have a clear and binding finding as to the facts and on these facts it appears that the plaintiff-appellant had attained majority before the partition proceedings ever commenced and that he deliberately premitted his brothers Aulia Bakhsh and Meera Bakhsh to remain recorded as co-sharers in respect of the property which really belonged to him and that he permitted them to represent his interests in that property and to assert claims of proprietary title on their own behalf which were really assertions of proprietary title on his behalf. I do not consider that this representation was a good representation in law but I do not consider the plaintiff-appellant's conduct in refusing to disclose his title and refraining from having his name recorded as a co-sharer and thus giving notice to the parties and the presiding officer as to his position, estops him from seeking any relief in the present proceedings. I consider that this is a clear case of estoppel by conduct and for that reason I would dismiss this appeal.

Mukerji, J.—I quite agree with my learned brother that the appeal should be dismissed, but I wish to add a few words. I would rest the decree of this Court more on the ground of representation than on the ground of estoppel. I quite agree that the principle of estoppel applies to the facts of the case but I should think that, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, the question of representation does come in although the appellant is a Muhammadan. The rule of estoppel by substantial representation is based on broad principles. The rule applies with great force in the case of a Hindu family simply because of the constitution of it, but in other cases only if the facts are sufficient for its support. The object of this rule is this. The Court is to dispense justice, and the rules of procedure should not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice. It is for this reason that in cases where it is found that a minor was substantially represented in a previous litigation he is not allowed to have set aside the decree, on the simple ground of want of representation. It has been held that he must show that he has been substantially prejudiced by the decree.

In the circumstances of this case, the appellant was living with his brothers. The brothers were carrying on all the business of the family. In fact, it was they who brought him up. It has been found, as a matter of fact, that he was all along aware of all the litigations that were going on in the family. It has been found in the case that, although he was adult at the date when the partition commenced, he never asked for being recorded as a co-sharer with his brothers. It was only on the death of his elder brother Aulia Bakhsh that his name was recorded. Even then his name was recorded not under his independent right but as an heir to Aulia Bakhsh. If, therefore, his brothers raised the same contention about the partition of the abadi of Yusufganj as the appellant is now raising and if that contention was found against his brothers, is it conducive to the interests of justice that Karim Bakhsh should be allowed to re-open the question which was settled against his brothers and for all practical purposes against him? I think that he should not be allowed to re-open the partition. I also would dismiss this appeal.

By the Court :—The order of the Court is that the appeal is dismissed with costs which will include fees on the higher scale.

First appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh, dated the 6th of January 1921.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. B. E. O'Connor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Aligarh. The action was one brought by Hira Lal for specific performance of an agreement, Khairati Lal being the defendant. The plaintiff and defendant each had a certain share in a house in mohalla Dhusaran in Aligarh. They had frequent quarrels and those quarrels brought them to the Criminal Courts, and it appears that when the Deputy Collector was investigating or about to investigate one of those criminal complaints it was suggested that, as these parties could not live pleasantly in close proximity to each other, it would be a very good thing if one sold his share of the house to the other and removed himself to a distance. That view seemed in the circumstances to both of them to be a wise thing to do, and on the 4th of September 1919 when the parties were before a Magistrate of the second class they agreed that one Sohan Lal, a pleader, should act in preparing an estimate of the price of the share in the house owned and possessed by Hira Lal. Eight days later, on the 12th of September, there was a formal agreement which gave Sohan Lal the power to determine what was the value of the house and for what amount the share should be sold, and it was agreed that Khairati Lal would purchase the share that Hira Lal possessed in the house for the amount that Babu Sohan Lal might determine to be. There was nothing whatever said about the method of procedure that Sohan Lal should adopt except that he was to determine the value of the house after inspecting it. That was all he had to do. He did inspect the house, of that there is no doubt, and on the 29th of September he valued the share of Hira Lal in the house at Rs. 5,500. That amount came as a considerable shock to Khairati Lal, and on the 8th of October he in fact offered to sell his share at a price which would show a considerably less value than Rs. 5,500 as Hira Lal's share in the house. Again, in the written statement in paragraph 19 he offered to sell his share in the house for Rs. 1,500 and put his share twice as much as Hira Lal's. On that basis, therefore, he was expressing his willingness to part with his share in the house at a price very very far below the estimated value put upon Hira Lal's share by Sohan Lal. When the case came to trial somehow or other Sohan Lal was got into the box and he gave evidence. When he gave evidence it became perfectly clear that he had acted in a thoroughly careless manner. He appeared to have no idea whatever of the proper way of discharging the duty which he had undertaken and we are greatly astonished that a pleader of mature age and presumably some legal experience should have conducted himself in the way that he did. On his own admission he did not ask the advice of anybody as to the rates and prices which were prevailing in the mohalla. We do not say that it was necessary for him to do that, because he might, in his own experience already, have got a fair general idea. It would, however, have been a prudent thing for him to do this and it might have saved him from giving an estimate which we regard as completely extravagant. We now know the basis of that estimate, and he says that having had the rooms counted he prepared an estimate of the price by guess. What in fact he did is clear from an answer he made to the Court. He took what he believed to be the price of materials and the price of labour prevailing in the year 1919, and he worked out a figure of what he believed would have cost if somebody started to build on that site a portion of the house such as he was called upon to value. He was aware that he was dealing with a house at least 40 years old as regards, at all events, the principal structure, and it never occurred to him at all that he was proceeding upon a completely unfair basis. What he ought to have done would have been to have asked himself what was the value of the house after allowing for the fact that it was a house 40 years of age. The proper question for him to put to himself was what would a willing purchaser be likely to give to a seller according to the original structure of the house its present condition and location. When questions directed to show that his value was over-estimated were put to him he dropped down to a sum of Rs. 3,000 as being the value of the house as it stands to-day. There is no doubt that Mr. Ali Aueat took a strong view with regard to Mr. Sohan Lal's incompetence and carelessness. We take the same view and we consider that he is deserving of censure and reprobation.

Now comes the appellant who says that he is entitled to a decree for specific performance, that is to say, that this Court in the exercise of its discretion must decree that Khairati Lal shall pay Rs. 5,500 for a property manifestly worth not more than Rs. 3,000. We decline to do it, and it so happens that this type of case has been considered in some of the English decisions. In the sixth edition of Fry on Specific Performance, p. 215, the law is summarised in this way: "Where the contract refers the price to a valuer for him to ascertain between the parties, this fact does not of itself preclude the Court from inquiring into the adequacy of the consideration, and this inadequacy of consideration would, of course, be strengthened as a defence if any circumstances arose which threw a doubt on the accuracy with which the valuation was made. The effect of an under-valuing by the valuers is a question which has, however, been but little discussed in our Courts: it has been debated with the usual diversity of opinion by the writers on Civil law. It is conceived that, if the under-value were such as to convince the Court that the valuers had acted under fraud or mistake, the contract would be incapable of enforcement in Equity: otherwise, if the under-value did not so convince the Court that the valuers had acted under fraud or mistake, the contract would be capable of enforcement in Equity." We are of opinion here that the valuer arrived at his finding by applying a wholly mistaken standard. We, therefore, approve the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

JUDGMENT.

Mr. Raymond, A. J. C.—The difficulty in this case seem to have arisen in this way. A Commissioner had been appointed to effect a partition of the lands belonging both to the plaintiff and the defendants in equal halves. There were two Survey Numbers 43 and 44 on which stood two shops. A Sanad of these Survey Numbers showed an area of 440 feet and the Commissioner apparently in the sketch prepared by him drew a line dividing the land equally as he imagined between the plaintiff and the defendants. However, according to the plaintiff, the area which has come to the possession of the defendants is 289 feet 6 inches whereas the plaintiff acquires 223 feet 6 inches. This, no doubt, shows that the measurement shown in the Sanad was not correct.

Plaintiff asked for amendment of the decree and the lower Court has appointed or proposed to appoint an Overseer to measure the whole property, that is, both the Survey Numbers 43 and 44, to ascertain whether the plaintiff's allegation is correct. The defendants-appellants urge that the decree cannot be amended in execution proceedings but that the plaintiff should file a suit. It appears to me that this contention is untenable for the question between the parties is one that relates to the execution of the decree between the parties to the suit and a separate suit does not lie. In Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, at page 122, 3rd Edition, it is observed that if a decree-holder takes in execution land which is not at all covered by the decree, or land which is in excess of the decree, the proper course for the judgment-debtor is to proceed by an application under section 47, Civil Procedure Code, for the recovery of the land in the one case, and the excess in the other and not by a separate suit. In Dhan Kunwar v. Mahtab Singh (1), it was held that, "where by a sale in execution the decree as it stood at the time when execution was taken out had been fully satisfied, but the decree was afterwards amended at the instance of the judgment-debtors, and in consequence of the amendment the decree-holders were found to have realized more from the judgment-debtors than they were entitled to, that it was competent to the judgment-debtors by application under section 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure to recover such surplus from decree holders." And at page 81 of the same report the Chief Justice refers to a possible case where after the execution sale it appeared that the decree awarded less to the decree-holder than he was entitled to according to the judgment and pointed out that in such a case the decree-holder, notwithstanding the sale would be justified in applying for the amendment of the decree so as to entitle him to recover in execution the full amount decided in the judgment to be due to him and that such application should be made under section

(1) 22 A. 79; A. W. N. (1899) 181; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1083.

244 corresponding with section 47 of the present Code.

The application, therefore, rightly comes under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, read with section 151, Civil Procedure Code, which refers to the inherent powers of the Court to be exercised in doing substantial justice between the parties.

I, therefore, concur in the order of my learned brother, dismissing with appeal with costs.

Mr. Madgowkar, A. J. C. -A preliminary decree for partition was passed and a Commissioner was appointed and upon his measurements and plan the final decree ensued. The plaintiff-respondent applied under sections 47, 151 and 152, Civil Procedure Code, to the Court to re-measure the portions allotted to the parties on the ground apparently that the Commissioner's total measurement was too small by about 66 feet and that the defendants-appellants had been wrongly placed in possession of this excess. The lower Court decided that it had jurisdiction in execution to enter into this question. The defendants appeal.

The argument for the appellants is that the Court having made a final partition was functus officio and could not in execution correct its own decree. The language of section 47, however, is broad and clear enough to cover the present question. Nor is it apparent what advantage to the parties would ensue if, as is contended for the appellants, the question now raised could be decided not in execution but by a fresh suit. The present question clearly arises between the parties to the suit and relates to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree and it, therefore, must be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit under section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As instances of a similar character, in addition to the authorities quoted by the learned Sub-Judge, I may refer to the case of Abdul Karim v. Islamin Nissa Bibi (2) and the judgment of Hayward, J., in Shivhai v. Yesoo (3), Scott, C. J., in Moru Narsu v. Hassan Valad Fattah Khan (4) and

(3) 48 Ind. Cas. 130; 43 B. 235; 20 Bom. L. R. 925.

(4) 48 Ind. Cas. 135; 43 B. 240; 20 Bom. L. R. 929.

RANI v. AIDAL SINGH

Ganpatrao Sultanrao v. Anandrao Jagando-rao (5), that money recovered in excess in execution can be recovered back in execution and not in a separate suit. It is not clear why land if recovered in excess in partition cannot be recovered back in execution and the error corrected.

Both under section 47 as well as under section 151 the Court has clearly jurisdiction. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) ss. 4, 79, Sch. IV, Art 30—Ejectment by land-holder—Ejectment by one of several co-sharers—Suit to recover holding—Limitation.

When a tenant is unlawfully ejected by one of several co-sharers in the patti, who together would be entitled to recover rent from him, and, therefore, jointly constitute the landholder, he cannot be deemed to have been ejected by his land-holder within the meaning of section 79 of the Agra Tenancy Act, or for the purposes of Article 80 of Schedule IV to the Act.

Second appeal against the decree of the First Additional District Judge of Alighrah, dated the 21st March 1922.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of the following circumstances. The respondent

ents, who are four in number, instituted the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for the ejectment of the appellant's predecessor-in-interest (husband) from certain plots. The allegation was that the respondents were the occupancy tenants and the original defendant was their sub-tenant. The defendant pleaded that he was a co-sharer in the village and he was holding the land as his Khud Kasht. He denied the respondent's right to eject him as a sub-tenant. He also pleaded limitation.

The suit was thrown out by the Court of first instance, but on appeal the learned District Judge remanded an issue to the Munsif. That issue was: "Are the present appellants occupancy tenants in the land in dispute or is it Khud Kasht of the present respondents?" The learned Munsif held that the plaintiffs, the appellants before the first Appellate Court, were occupancy tenants. He also held that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties and that the respondent (the original defendant) was a co-sharer in the patti in which the lands were situated and he held the land without the consent of the plaintiffs. He also held that as there was a lam-bardar in the patti the defendant could not be regarded as land-holder.

On receipt of the finding, the lower Appellate Court decreed the suit. It did not come to any conclusion in what capacity the defendant was in possession nor did it come to any conclusion how long did the defendants possession extend.

These points not having been determined by the Court below, with the help of the learned Counsel for the parties, I went through the evidence and come to the following conclusion. I find that the defendant was one of the co-sharers in the patti and that he had been in possession of the lands for a period between 6 and 10 years without the consent of the plaintiffs.

On these findings it has been argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant (the original defendant's successor-in-title) that the suit should have been thrown out as being barred by limitation under section 79 of the Tenancy Act and serial No. 30 of the 4th schedule of the Tenancy Act, the period of limitation is laid down as six months.

RIAZ-UD-DIN v. SHUJA-UD-DIN

It has been argued by the learned Counsel for the respondents that the appellant cannot be called the "landholder." She is only one of the several co-sharers who are acting through a lambardar, one Reshan Singh. The question is, how far this contention of the respondent is correct.

No authority bearing on the point has been cited to me. If we look to the definition of the word 'land-holder' to be found in section 4 of the Tenancy Act we see that the landholder is the person to whom rent is payable. Where there are more than one person entitled to receive rent, the land-holder would be the whole body of men and not one single member. The word 'person' should be read as having been used to include 'persons'. Applying this definition, it follows that when a tenant is unlawfully ejected, say, by one of a body of 150 co-sharers in the patti, who together would be entitled to recover the rent, the tenant cannot be deemed to have been ejected by his land-holder. Referring to section 194 of the Tenancy Act we find that where there are two or more co-sharers entitled to any right, that right must be exercised conjointly unless they have an appointed agent. Such an appointed agent would be the lambardar. For the application of the rule of six months' limitation and of section 79 of the Tenancy Act it seems to me it would be necessary for the whole body of co-sharers to act (to eject the tenant) or the lambardar to do so on behalf of the whole body of co-sharers. This would follow from the natural meaning of the several sections. If we look to the spirit of the rule we also see that this is based on sound sense. As I have said, by way of example, if there be 150 co-sharers (a matter which is not unusual in Districts like Azamgarh, Gorakhpur and Basti) and one of the co-sharers happens to take it into his head to eject a tenant it would be very hard on the latter. He may sue within six months one of the 150 co-sharers and when he has received the fruit of his litigation, he may be dispossessed by another of the 150 of the co-sharers.

My finding of law, therefore, is that the ejection of the respondents by the appellant's predecessor was not an ejection to which section 79 of the Tenancy Act or the short period of limitation would apply.

That being the case, there seems to be no bar to the success of the plaintiffs-respondents. It is true that they brought the suit in a Court which had jurisdiction only to eject tenants. But no question of jurisdiction having been taken, and as it has been found that the title subsists in the respondents, there is no reason why they should not succeed. I have already stated that the case went in appeal to the District Judge who was the Appellate Court both for the Revenue and Civil Courts. The issue that was remanded by him for trial, was remanded to the Civil Court. It follows that the decree of the Court below was right.

The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Application under paragraph 20 of Schedule II, Civil Procedure Code, for filing of a private award.

Mr. Mela Ram and Lala Tirath Ram, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. Obedulla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether a private award can be amended by the Court on the ground that the arbitrator had made an arithmetical mistake in arriving at the sums due by one party to another. The Court below has held that in such a case it is not competent to interfere and must pass a decree in harmony with the award. The matter has been discussed in Shyam Lal v. Parshottam Daso. (1), in which it was held that in the case of a private award a Court has no power to correct an arithmetical error, not to remit such an award for re-consideration.

For the appellant reference has been made to Hutchinson v. Shepperton (2) and two other English rulings which are based upon broad lines of equity. In this country, however, the question must be decided upon a consideration of the Statute Law which is contained in paragraphs 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. In the case of a private award the Court has not been invested with the power of modification or correction such as it possesses under paragraph 12, in the case of an award made on reference to arbitration under the orders of the Court. Under paragraph 14, it may remit the award when it is illegal on the face of it, but I agree with the Court below that a mere arithmetical error does not amount to an illegality. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the real intention of the arbitrator is not represented by his final conclusions and that his real conclusion must be gauged by the processes by which he arrived at those conclusions. There seems to me little doubt that if the parties had argued the point before the arbitrator he might have amended his final conclusions but even this is not certain, he was not bound to give his detailed reasons for the award and all that we have to consider are the terms of the conclusions at which he arrived, regardless of any error that may have crept into his calculations.

As the law stands at present, I cannot hold that the Court below could have adopted any course other than that which it has followed and I dismiss the appeal, but direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17 (1) (a)—Compromise declaring right to immoveable property—Registration, whether necessary—Agreement reduced to writing—Oral evidence, whether admissible.

Where an agreement is not required by law to be in writing or to be registered it is not necessary to prove the agreement by the production of a written document.

Where, however, the terms of an agreement have been reduced into writing, the writing alone is the evidence of the agreement and no oral evidence can be adduced to prove the agreement.

A petition of compromise filed in mutation proceedings which purports to declare the rights of the parties to immoveable property of the value of more than Rs. 100 falls within the purview of section 17 (1) (a) of the Registration Act and requires registration.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Judge of Ghazipur, dated the 20th April 1922.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question for determination in this Second Appeal is whether a certain petition filed in the Revenue Court on 22nd December 1914 in a mutation proceeding is admissible in evidence, and, if so, whether it gives the appellant the property which he claims.

The question has to be decided with reference to the peculiar facts of this case, having regard, of course, to the principles laid down in various cases by this High Court.

It appears that on the death of Musammam Udha, the widow of one Monohar Ojha, certain persons, including the appellant, claimed title. Applications were made in the Revenue Court. It does not appear clearly on what ground the present appellant claimed. The compromise in question was filed. This compromise will be examined later on. It will be sufficient here to mention that by this compromise the parties to it asked the Revenue Court to record the names of themselves in certain shares. An order was made in accordance with the compromise. But it appears from the statement of facts made in the plaint that this order was set aside by a Court of appeal on the ground that the persons actually in possession were the Maharaja of Dumraon and another. Some of the defendants in this suit instituted a suit in the Civil Court for the ejectment of the Maharaja of Dumraon and others with respect to the property which belonged to Musammam Udha. That suit succeeded and on foot of the decree mutation orders were passed in favour of the contesting defendants. This fact constituted the cause of action of the plaintiff-appellant and he brought the suit for maintenance of possession.

It has been found by the Court of first instance that the plaintiff never got possession. The plaintiff based his claim on two grounds. He contended that he was an adopted son of one Dhanai Ojha and as such was reversioner to the property. On this point the decision of the Courts below is against him. It has been found that Dhanai Ojha never adopted him. The second point that was taken by him was that as the result of the compromise arrived at in the mutation proceedings he was entitled to the share now claimed by him. The Courts below negatived this ground of the claim. They held that the document by itself did not create any title for want of registration.

The Courts below have relied on the Full Bench case of Jagrani v. Bisheshwar Dube (1). The learned Counsel for the appellant has sought to distinguish this case and has referred me to two cases decided subsequently, namely, the case of Baldeo Singh v. Udal Singh (2) and Salamatul-Zamina v. Masha Alla Khan, (3).

In my opinion this case must be decided on the peculiar facts involved in it. The principles of law are perfectly clear. Where an agreement is not required by law to be in writing or to be registered it is not necessary to prove the agreement by the production of a written document. Now the question in this case is whether the petition of compromise filed in the Revenue Court is admissible to prove the plaintiff's title. I have already said that, it has been found that the appellant has no title to the property independently of the compromise. This claim based on adoption by Dhanai Ojha has been negatived. But that fact alone does not show that there was not a bona fide contest in the mutation proceedings. But the question is, "the plaintiff having no initial title at all, what is that which gives him the title?" It is said that it is the agreement among the parties in the mutation proceedings by which they settled their dispute that the appellant's claim was recognised. Reading the petition of compromise I find the following sentence in it :—

"Haq o hissa har sulah kunindagam hasb-i-zail qarar paya."

Assuming that there was a bona fide dispute as to the property the terms of the settlement were reduced into writing and the petition of compromise purported to declare the rights of the several executants. As the terms of the compromise were reduced into writing, the writing alone is the evidence and no oral evidence can be adduced to prove the agreement. The writing being there and the property involved being worth more than Rs. 100 the provisions of section 17 of the Registration Act would apply and the document cannot be of any value to the appellant without registration. In fact, the petition of compromise is the title-deed of the appellant. He has no title independently of this document. In this view I think the decision of the Courts below was perfectly right. I dismiss the appeal with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Hindu Law—Joint Family—Partition, whether must be equal—Arbitration—Reference made by father—Award, whether binding on minor sons.

There is no absolute rule of Hindu Law that a partition must be equal, although, generally speaking, it is so. A member of a joint Hindu family may of his own free will accept as his share as small a portion of the joint property as seems good to him, and renounce all claims to the rest. [p. 1048, col. 1.]

Amrit Rao v. Mahund Rao, 53 Ind. Cas. 866 ; 13 L. W. 112 ; —15 N. L. R. 165 (P. C.), followed.

A father in a joint Hindu family as manager fully represents the family, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, his acts are binding on the other members of the family. It is competent to him to refer to arbitration the partition of the joint family property, and an award made on such a reference, if valid in other respects, will be binding on the sons, whether adults or minors. [p. 1048, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Saugor, dated 17th January 1923, in Civil Suit No. 63 of 1921.

Messrs. M. Gupta and N. G. Bose, li. li., for the Appellants.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for partition of the family property, alleging that part of the joint property had been partitioned among the parties on 22nd August 1920 by six punchas, but that no immoveable property was divided. The defendants alleged that the whole joint property had been divided on various dates ; that immoveable property had been partitioned by an agreement on the same date as that alleged by the plaintiffs but conducted by different arbitrators, and that the parties are in possession of their respective shares in accordance with the partition. The Additional District Judge, Saugor, found that the entire joint property had already been partitioned and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit ; hence the present appeal.

The evidence has been discussed at length by the learned Additional District Judge. The principal point in this case is as to the genuineness of Exhibits D-13 and D-14, which are respectively the reference to the arbitration by the parties and the award of the arbitrators, dated 22nd August 1920. These documents are alleged by the plaintiffs to be forgeries. The oral evidence, as pointed out by the lower Court, is conflicting. The whole of the evidence has been read out in Court and the witnesses on both sides have made certain statements to which exception can be taken, but we do not think that it is necessary to go in detail through the oral evidence. The principal factor in arriving at a determination in this case must be the conduct of the parties, which is a matter of very great importance,

SAWAI SINGAI BALCHAND V. SAWAI SINGAI LACHMAN PRASAD

The partition of the immoveable property is alleged to be unequal since the defendants have been given a larger share in three villages than the plaintiffs. The genealogy is given at the beginning of the lower Court's judgment and need not be repeated. It has been argued by the learned Advocate for the respondents that in the case of a large property, such as is in issue in the present case, worth more than a lakh, it cannot be definitely said that the partition is unequal, merely because the defendants have got a larger share in the immoveable property. It would be necessary to go in detail through all the other items of property, cash, ornaments, cattle and grain, etc., valuing each item, in order to be able to decide whether the partition was unequal or not. In our view of the case, however, this question does not arise, because, if it can be shown that the plaintiffs submitted the question of partition to arbitration by Exhibit D-13 and accepted an award of the arbitration by Exhibit D-14, the partition, whether equal or not, is binding upon them. Exhibit D-14, which is signed by the arbitrators and which is denied by the plaintiffs, was apparently signed originally by the representatives of the three branches, plaintiff No. 1 Panchamal, plaintiff No. 5 Nathuram and defendant No. 1 Lachman Prasad, and their signatures have been struck out. The reason assigned for this by the appellants is that the defendants, knowing that when the document was presented for registration the Registrar would require the attendance of the executing parties, scored out these signatures in order to prevent the plaintiffs being called, as they knew they would at once repudiate the document.

It may be observed that if Exhibit D-14 is a forgery, it was not necessary for the defendants to forge the signatures of the plaintiffs on an award, as the defendants must have known that the plaintiffs at the first opportunity would repudiate the document. The explanation put forward by the defendants for scoring out the signatures is that, while an award does not require registration, the effect of the signatures of the plaintiffs on the document would be to convert it into an instrument of partition which would require a very large stamp, in view of the value of the property. The suggestion made by the defendants that the names were scored out at the instance of the Sub-Registrar has been denied by the Sub-Registrar himself, and seems very improbable that he would interfere in any way with the nature of the document presented for registration.

The defendants' case is that the award was entered into with the consent of all the parties and that after disputes arose it was found necessary to have it registered, and it was only after that that the plaintiffs attacked it as a forgery. It seems probable that circumstances arose which compelled the registration of the document. The date of Exhibit D-14 is 22nd August 1920 it was presented for registration on 11th December 1920 and the plaintiff No. 1 says that he got knowledge of it on 15th December 1920.

In this connection the conduct of the plaintiffs is of very great importance. The document was impounded for want of stamp and sent to the Collector. Plaintiff No. 1 alleges that he presented a petition to the Sub-Registrar, saying that it was a forgery. The Sub-Registrar is unable to state whether any such application was made, without reference to the application itself, and no copy of such an application has been put in on the record, although presumably the original application must be in the possession of the registration authorities. Proceedings were then taken by the Deputy Commissioner to recover the deficit stamp and notices were issued to the parties. Plaintiff No. 1 who is the principal plaintiff in the case, plaintiff No. 5 being a young man, alleged to be of weak intellect, did not contest the award as a forgery. It is true that plaintiff No. 5 Nathuram (Ex. D-25), stated before the Collector on 30th March 1921: "The document is an award made by the Panch but it was not done in my presence." But, apart from that, we find no protest on the part of the plaintiffs that the award was a forgery. Plaintiff No. 1 made no allegation that it was forged, though his interests were seriously affected by it. Naturally, when plaintiffs were called upon to make good the deficiency of the stamp, they would have said that the award is a forgery, made without their knowledge, that they did not sign it, and that, therefore, they were not responsible for payment of any deficient stamp-duty on it, nor did it affect any property.

SAWAI SINGAI BALCHAND v. SAWAI SINGAI LACHMAN PRASAD

Ultimately, stamp-duty and penalty were levied on the award which was thus made legal. Before this, an application made for mutation of names in accordance with the award. The plaintiffs did not appear before the Tahsildar, although notices were issued. They appealed to the Deputy Commissioner against the Tahsildar's order regarding mutation, not on the ground that the award was a forgery but that it was unregistered and that there was no proper proclamation. This is shown by Exhibit D-2, which is the order of the Deputy Commissioner in appeal, dated 18th March 1921. The appeal is by Panchamlal, plaintiff No. 1, against the order of the Tahsildar, Rehli, granting mutation in favour of defendant No. 2. The first ground of appeal was that there was no proper proclamation, and the only other ground was that the mutation granted was based on an unregistered document, that is, the award (Exh. D-14), which is now being challenged as a forgery.

It is perfectly clear that if this document was a forgery, both the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 5, whose interests were adversely affected by it, would have lost no time in bringing this fact to the notice of the Revenue authorities. One would have expected also that they would have instituted civil or criminal proceedings against the defendants with a view to have the document set aside, but, on the contrary, we find that in the appeal against the order in the mutation proceedings the question of the document being forged is not even mentioned, and what is still more curious is that from the statement of plaintiff No. 1 Panchamlal it appears that even after this, further moveable property was divided between the plaintiffs and the defendants in March and May 1921. It is difficult to suppose that if the plaintiffs were aware that their co-sharers defendants had brought into existence the forged award, by which they were unjustly deprived of their fair share of the property, they would consent to divide any more property with them until the award was set aside.

Great importance attaches to this conduct of the plaintiffs, and in our opinion it is entirely against the theory that this award was got up behind their back, without their consent, and is a forgery as they now contend.

It is to be observed that the plaintiffs admit that a Panch was called to effect a partition on the 22nd August, the same date as alleged by the defendants, but the Panch is different. The partition which they set up was only a partial partition. It is not supported by any document, whereas the partition set up by the defendants is supported by Exhibits D-13 and D-14, and it has been shown that the names of the sharers have been mutated in accordance with Exhibit D-14 and that the plaintiffs did not attack that award on the ground of its being a forgery. It has also been admitted by the plaintiff No. 1 (P. W. 1) that the buffaloes were divided in Kuar, and the bullocks in Baisakh following, that is, subsequent to the date of the alleged forged award which came to the notice of the plaintiff No. 1 in the preceding December.

In these circumstances, the story of the defendants appears much more probable. The Panchas named in the plaint as having been present at the partition set up by the plaintiffs are four only, Harchand, Bholanath, Berluda Prasad and Mulchand. Subsequently, in his evidence the plaintiff No. 1 added two more, namely Bilku and Ahmirchand. Out of these six, only Mulchand was examined as P. W. 2 and Harchand as P. W. 9; the other four are not examined. Mulchand is the plaintiffs' Karinda and was prosecuted by the defendants for criminal breach of trust. Harchand is son-in-law of plaintiff 1. He was married to the sister of defendant 1, but she died long ago. On the other hand, the defendants have examined all Panchas named by them in their statement, with the exception of Parmanand, and also the witnesses who attested the award. In this connection, we may remark that the attempt on the part of the appellants to show that the letter "ग" i.e. (Gavhi, witness), before the names of these witnesses has been changed to "द", i.e. (Daskat, signed by), is unsuccessful. There is no such change. All that has happened is that the writer had made a mark (11=) before the signature of each witness; in some instances the signatures coincided with this mark and in others did not. Even if such a change had been made, the fact that uneducated arbitrators described themselves as witnesses would have little significance.

SAWAI SINGAI BALCHAND v. SAWAI SINGAI LACHMAN PRASAD

It is extremely improbable that if the defendants wanted to forge an award, they would go the length of forging the signatures of the plaintiffs on it and then scratch them out again. The conduct of the parties as referred to in the earlier portion of this judgment leaves no doubt in our minds that D-14 is not a forgery, and, therefore, it is inherently improbable that D-13, which is a submission to arbitration, is a forgery either. If, therefore, these documents are genuine, as we believe they are, the question of the inequality of the partition does not arise. By Exhibit D-13 the plaintiffs gave power to the arbitrators to divide the property, as they liked, in order to avoid litigation. It is not contended that there was any inequality of partition except as regards the land, although it is true that the defendants have got a larger share of the land. This is immaterial in view of the acceptance by the plaintiffs of the award of arbitrators, as shown by their subsequent conduct. An objection was taken to it merely on the score of registration and they have not expressly declared it to be a forgery, so the award would be binding on them.

Plaintiff 5, Nathuram, has admitted signing Exhibit D-17, which refers to his acceptance of the award, but says his signature was obtained by force by defendant 1.

It has been contended on behalf of the appellants that, assuming the award is genuine, the plaintiffs had no power to bind their minor sons and heirs by a reference to arbitration. It is contended that, under the Hindu Law, the partition must be equal. It has been held by the Privy Council in Amritrao v. Mukundrao (1), that a member of a joint Hindu family may of his own free will accept as his share as small a portion of the joint property as seems good to him, and renounce all claims to the rest. There is no absolute rule that the partition must be equal although, generally speaking, it is so.

With regard to the power of the father to bind his sons by a consent to an unequal partition, authority will be found in Jagan Nath v. Manu Lal (2), where it was held that it is competent to the father of a joint Hindu family in his capacity of managing member of the family to refer to arbitration the partition of the joint family property, and the award made on such a reference, if in other respects valid, will be binding on the sons. In Balaji Narayan Gokhale v. Nana (3), it was held that a manager of a joint Hindu family, even when he is not the father, has the power to bind the family by a reference of a dispute with any outsider regarding any family property to arbitration, provided such reference be for the benefit of the family. Minors in the family are bound by the reference and, consequently, by the award made upon it. The law is that as a father in a joint Hindu family as manager fully represents the family, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, his acts are binding on the other members of the family, it is competent for him to refer any dispute with reference to any matter, in which the family is interested, to arbitration. There is no evidence of fraud or collusion here, and unless the whole property is re-valued, it cannot definitely be stated how for the partition is unequal.

It has been contended on behalf of the respondents that the inequality only amounts to an extra share of Rs. 5,000 in three villages, whereas it has been contended on behalf of the appellants that there is a gross inequality in the sir and khudkasht lands. But, in view of the evidence derived from the conduct of the parties in accepting the award, the question of inequality does not arise.

The appeal consequently fails and is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) s. 11, whether exhaustive—Res judicata—Husband and wife, question of divorce decided between—Question, whether can be re-agitated by wife's father.

The rules of procedure are framed for aiding justice and should not be so interpreted as to operate against the course of justice.

Section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not exhaustive as to the principles of res judicata.

Where it has once been decided between a husband and wife that there has been no divorce of the wife by the husband, the question cannot be re-agitated at the instance of the wife's father in a subsequent suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights to which the former happens to be a party.

Second appeal against the decree of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, of Allahabad, dated the 27th August 1923.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case which have give rise to this appeal are these : The plaintiff, Nazir, is the husband, the appellant, Musammât Khatoon Bibi, is said to be his wife. Muhammad Ismail, appellant No. 2, is father of Mt. Khatoon Bibi. In a previous suit between the husband and wife it was held that there was no divorce. Nazir instituted this suit, out of which this appeal arises, for the restitution of conjugal rights against his wife. The father-in-law, Ismail, was made a party to the suit on the ground that the father-in-law was putting obstructions in the way of the wife's going to live with the plaintiff. The lower Court found that the question of divorce was res judicata and did not permit the father-in-law, Ismail, to adduce evidence in proof of his allegation that there was in fact a divorce. Ismail raised a further plea that there was no cause of action against him. On that plea the learned Judge of the Lower Appellate Court has pointed out that it was clear from his statement that he was not prepared to allow his daughter to go and live with her husband and there was, therefore, a cause of action against him.

In this appeal it is urged that the lower Courts were wrong in shutting out evidence. It is also urged that there is no cause of action against Ismail. The last of the grounds taken in appeal, namely, the 4th ground, has not been pressed before me.

As regards the question of divorce, I think the lower Courts were perfectly right. The question of the status between the alleged husband and wife has been once decided as between themselves. It would be simply monstrous to allow the father to prove that there was, as a matter of fact, a divorce. It is true that section 11, Civil Procedure Code has no application when the question is raised by Ismail. But that section is not exhaustive. In the case of S. Ramamurti Dhara v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1), it was held that where there was a dispute between to rival claimants for a property and the suit was decreed in favour of one it was not open to a third party to contend that the property did not belong to the successful party. In this connection see also Naha Kishore Tilokdas v. Paro Bera (2). The principle on which these decisions were given applies to this case. If the Courts were to allow Ismail to prove successfully that there was a divorce, the result would be that, while the wife would be compelled to go and live with her husband, the decree, would be nullified by the father being allowed to keep back the wife. The rules of procedure are framed for aiding justice and they should not be so interpreted as to operate against the course of justice.

GAYA PRASAD v. FIRM MUTHU LAL

In my opinion, therefore, there is nothing in the first and second grounds of appeal.

The next point is whether the Court below was wrong in holding that the statement of the appellant himself showed that there was a good cause of action against him. I think that the Court below was justified in saying that it was clear from the attitude and pleadings of Ismail in the conduct of the case that the plaintiff was right in saying that Ismail was unwilling to allow his daughter to go and live with the plaintiff.

The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, Civil Procedure Code.

Arbitration—Submission, leave to revoke, when to be given.

In giving leave to revoke a submission, the Court shall be satisfied that a substantial miscarriage of justice will take place in the event of its refusal. It would be contrary to justice to give leave to revoke a submission to a party who, as a consideration for a contract, had agreed to submit any disputes, whether of law or fact, which might arise, to arbitration, when he found the case going against him. The exercise of the power of giving leave to revoke is in general limited to cases where the arbitrators are exceeding their jurisdiction, or refusing jurisdiction, or failing to do all that their jurisdiction requires them to do, and the principle underlying the exercise of the power to revoke, is that the parties take the arbitrators for better or for worse, that their decision is final both as to law and fact, that unless a substantial miscarriage of justice may take place, leave ought not to be given, and it is no miscarriage of justice for a party to be injured by bad law which he has agreed to be bound by.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala and Mr. P. N. Saprú, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Sailanath Mukerji and N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite party.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the learned Judge went a little too far in cancelling the order of the 15th of July 1922. We think we understand what his intention was, but it has left the matter in somewhat of a muddle, because if the order of the 15th of July is cancelled, the application ceases to exist, and the notice to the parties and the arbitrators is no longer effective. On the other hand, the parties before us are agreed that the application has not been disposed of and is still pending. All we can do, therefore, is—while suggesting that the arbitrators shall not go on with their arbitration while the application to revoke the submission is pending—to cancel the order of Mr. Holme of the 13th of August 1923, and to send the matter back in order that the application for revocation be heard and determined at a very early date. If the District Court of Cawnpore possesses a copy of the last Edition of Russel on Arbitration, namely, the 10th Edition, 1919, edited by Mr. Hudson, it will find in a very small compass in sub-section (4) of section 1 of part I, all the principles set out which ought to govern the decision of an application for leave to revoke. For the convenience of the Court, in case this book is not available, we may mention that it has always been, under the corresponding section in England, held by English Courts that in giving leave to revoke a submission, the Court shall be satisfied that a substantial miscarriage of justice will take place in the event of its refusal. It would be contrary to justice to give leave to revoke a submission to a party who, as a consideration for a contract, had agreed to submit any disputes, whether of law or fact, which might arise, to arbitration, when he found the case going against him. The exercise of the power of giving leave to revoke is in general limited to cases where the arbitrators are exceeding their jurisdiction, or refusing jurisdiction, or failing to do all that their jurisdiction requires them to do, and the principle underlying the exercise of the power to revoke is, that the parties take the arbitrators for better or for worse, that their decision is final both as to law and fact, that, unless a substantial miscarriage of justice may take place, leave ought not to be given, and it is no miscarriage of justice for a party to be injured by bad law which he has agreed to be bound by.

We set aside the order of the 13th of August 1923, and direct the record to be returned to the lower Court for disposal without delay. The costs will be costs in the application and will include in this Court fees on the higher scale.

The plaintiff agreed to sell goods to the defendant at Rs. 16-2-0 a bundle describing them as those he had purchased from R. N. & Co., who were buying the same from certain Mills at Rs. 14 a bundle. Some of the goods delivered by the plaintiff in pursuance of the contract were purchased by R. N. & Co. from the Mills at Rs. 9-12-0 but were of the same quality and description as those purchased at Rs. 14. The defendants received the goods at their godown and three months thereafter rejected the goods. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the purchase-money ;

Held, (1) that the contract being in respect of bales sold at Rs. 14 and the goods delivered being these sold at Rs. 9-8-0, there was a breach of the condition of the contract.

(2) but that the defendants having accepted the goods and not having rejected them within a " reasonable time " they were entitled under section 118 of the Contract Act only to claim compensation for damages caused by the breach of warranty of title.

(3) that, however, as the goods delivered were in texture and quantity the same as the goods contracted for, the damage caused was nil and the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled in full to the purchase money claimed.

Appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Madura in O. S. No. 70 of 1919.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case plaintiffs entered into a contract to sell 60 bales of yarn of various counts to defendants. Ex. A, dated 21st August 1918, is the first written record of the contract and in respect of the count of 50's with which we are mainly concerned, it was agreed that 30 bales should be supplied at Rs. 16-12-0 per bundle of 5 lbs. On 23rd August 1918 plaintiffs wrote another letter (Ex. C.) stating that the bales sold were those purchased from Rayalu Aiyar Nagasami Iyer & Co., which the latter were buying from the Mills at Rs. 14 per bundle. These two letters were accepted by defendants in Ex. B, and we may take the three documents together as embodying the terms of the contract. Plaintiffs delivered 28 bales, including 7 bales of count No. 50, between 9th September 1918 and 14th October 1918. The first 3 bales of 50's were paid for in full after deducting the advance paid in respect of them. All the bales were left in defendants's godown and no objection was taken until 19th December 1918 (Ex. H). It then transpired that Rayalu Iyer Nagasami Iyer & Co., had purchased 50's from the Madura Mill at Rs. 9-8-0 per bundle as well as at Rs. 14 per bundle, and some of the former bales were supplied to defendants. It is admitted that the goods in all the bales were of the same quality and description, except that some were sold by the Mills at Rs. 14 per bundle and some at Rs. 9 8-0 per bundle. As the contract was in respect of bales sold at the former price, and goods of the latter price were delivered, on the authority of Sivarama Iyer v. Subbiyer & Sons (1), this amounted to a breach of a condition of the contract and we may take it as such. On this footing the Subordinate Judge has held that plaintiffs broke the contract and has refused to decree their suit for the balance of purchase-money due in respect of those six bales. In appeal it is contended that, in spite of the breach of condition, the defendants accepted the goods and cannot, therefore, plead breach of contract, but are confined to their remedy under section 118 of the Contract Act, that is, the damages sustained owing to the breach of warranty. It is then contended for respondents that they were entitled to a reasonable time within which to reject the goods and that their rejection 3 or 4 months after delivery was within a reasonable time. In section 118 the words are, "time reasonably sufficient for examining and trying" and it is not suggested that, during the three months after delivery, defendants made any attempt to examine or try the goods, nor did they make any enquiries as to their origin. Undoubtedly, 3 months is an excessive period for mere examination or trial, but it is argued that, inasmuch as defendants were not in a position to find out the breach of warranty by mere examination the reasonable time must be extended so as to cover the time that actually elapsed before its discovery. This, however, is not what the section provides, and when delivery is accepted, money paid, and the goods stored in the buyer's premises, it is not unnatural that the seller should consider that they have been accepted and he is entitled to protection equally with the purchaser. We must, therefore, hold that the time was not reasonable. (Vide Original Side Appeal No. 13 of 1921) in this Court and Kissendoyal v. Askaran, (2). In this view we hold that defendants accepted the 6 bales of 50's which form the subject-matter of this appeal and can only claim compensation for the damage caused by the breach of warranty which is admittedly nil, for the goods delivered were in texture and quantity the same as the goods contracted for. Plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to the balance of purchase-money claimed by them. The Subordinate Judge has awarded them Rs. 14-2-0 per bundle, the price realized on re-sale, but the contract price is Rs. 16-2-0 and plaintiffs are entitled to an additional Rs. 2 per bundle, that is, Rs. 960. The Subordinate Judge has also allowed defendants to set off the advance paid by them in respect of the 32 bales, which were admittedly not delivered, but they do not form the subject-matter of this suit. The right to the money paid in advance will depend upon a number of considerations in reference to the contract as a whole and these questions have not been put in issue. With regard to this sum, therefore, defendants will be referred to a separate suit. The decree is modified by awarding plaintiffs Rs. 35,190 plus Rs. 960 minus Rs. 19,360, that is, Rs. 16,790 with interest at 9 per cent. from 2nd April 1919 to date of plaint and subsequent interest on the aggregate at 6 per cent.; and parties will pay and receive proportionate costs. Respondents will pay appellants' costs in appeal.

ABDUL AZIZ KHAN v. THE MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, KHANDWA

Contracts made by a public body must be strictly in conformity with the mode of making such contracts as prescribed by Statute.

The word "contract," as used in section 31 of the C. P. Municipal Act, must be taken in its ordinary sense.

A sale by auction by a Municipality is a contract within the meaning of section 31 of the C. P. Municipal Act and in order to be binding on the Municipality must be in writing.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Khandwa, in Civil Appeal No. 67 of 1922 dated 18th August 1922.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This appeal has been argued on a single point of law, and until that is decided the remaining questions in it cannot be considered.

The facts are that the defendants, the Municipal Committee, Khandwa, sold by public auction the grass growing round the Moghat tank under certain conditions which were duly published, but subsequently, they required the plaintiffs to enter into an agreement which was contrary to the conditions of sale, certain coupes being excluded and certain impossible conditions being imposed, and on the plaintiffs objecting the coupes were sold by the Municipality to another person. The plaintiffs, therefore, sued the defendants for damages.

The first Court, the Subordinate Judge, Khandwa, awarded the plaintiffs Rs. 2,692-8-0. On appeal the District Judge of Nimar reduced the damages to Rs. 1,412-8-0. The plaintiffs make a second appeal against this decision and the defendants put in cross objections.

The appeal and the cross-objections relate to certain items of damages, but at the hearing a preliminary objection was taken by the respondents that under section 31 of the Central Provinces Municipal Act of 1903 the suit would not lie because there was no contract in writing with the plaintiffs as required by the Act. Section 31 of the Act lays down (1) "Every contract made by or on behalf of a Committee whereof the value or amount exceeds fifty rupees shall be in writing. (2) Every such contract shall be signed by the president or vice-president and a secretary.... (3) If a contract to which this section applies is entered into otherwise than in conformity therewith it shall not be binding on the Committee." The question, therefore, arises as to whether a sale by auction held by the Municipal Committee is a contract within the meaning of section 31 of the Act.

It is of course settled law that it is absolutely necessary that the contracts made by a public body should be strictly in conformity with the mode of making such contracts, as prescribed by Statute. There are numerous decisions on this point, the leading case being the well-known English case, Young & Co. v. The Corporation of Leamington (1).

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the case does not fall under section 31 of the Municipal Act, as the sale is not a contract. Because if the sale is complete, the stage of contract is passed. The question of the confirmation of the sale does not arise, as both the lower Courts found that there was an absolute confirmation of the sale by the Municipality. Subsequently, however, the Municipality sought to impose new conditions which it had obviously no power to do.

There can be no doubt whatever that the sale by auction is a contract. This has been repeatedly held in many cases. It was laid down in the case of Payne v. Carr (2), that a binding at an auction, instead of being a conditional purchase, is a mere offer; that the auctioneer is the agent of the vendor; that the assent of both parties is necessary to the contract; that this assent is signified by knocking down the hammer, and that, till then, either party may retract. In Johnston v. Boyes (3), following Warlow v. Harrison (4), it was held that when the conditions of sale provide that the highest bidder shall be the purchaser, the person who makes the highest bid has a right of action against the seller on his refusing to act in accordance with the conditions.

The word "contract" as used in sections 30 and 31 of the C. P. Municipal Act must be taken in its ordinary meaning. Contract is defined in section 2 of the Indian Contract Act as an agreement enforceable by law, and an agreement is constituted by a promise or a set of promises forming the consideration for each other.

The Municipality offered the grass for sale by auction, thereby promising to sell it to the highest bidder, the plaintiffs accepted the offer by bidding at the auction, and on confirmation of the sale there was a complete contract, subject to such conditions as were accepted by the plaintiffs. There cannot be the smallest doubt that on confirmation of the sale by the Municipality there was contract between themselves and the plaintiffs, and, as required by section 31 of the C. P. Municipal Act, such a contract must be in writing, signed by the President or Vice-President and a Secretary. By Exhibit D-1 the Municipality announced the conditions of sale under a notice signed by the Secretary. The only one of these conditions, which is material at the present stage, is No. III, which refers to the return of the deposit to the purchaser in case of the non-confirmation of the sale for any reasons. It will thus appear that the contract was not to be completed until the confirmation of the sale. The sale was duly held and the plaintiffs were the highest bidders.

Exhibit D-2 is a memorandum of the auction-sale held on 26th July 1920. It mentions all the bids and states that the conditions of sale are herewith attached; one copy of the conditions is also given to the highest bidder, Abdul Aziz (plaintiff). Exhibit D-2 is signed by the Vice-President, Secretary and two members of the Municipality, and also by the plaintiffs, but it cannot be regarded as a completed contract because it required confirmation by the Committee as provided for in the conditions of sale. Exhibits P-4 and D-9 are the same Exhibit, being copies of the resolution of the Municipality, dated 7th October 1920, which states as follows; "Read papers showing sale of grass coupes in the catchment area of the Moghat tank together with the Sub-Committee's report thereon. Resolved that the sale be confirmed as per recommendation of the Sub-Committee. Resolved further that the contractors Munshi Aziz Khan and G. A. Dalal be asked to execute an agreement as per conditions recommended by the Sub-Committee which were proclaimed at the time of auction."

On confirmation by the Municipality the contract came into existence. That contract was based on the auction-sale and is evidenced by the Memorandum, Exhibit D-2, which is signed by the Vice-President and Secretary, as also by the plaintiff. I do not see any reason why this should not be considered as a sufficient compliance with the Statute which does not lay down that the contract should be in any particular form, except that it should be in writing, signed by the President or Vice-President and a Secretary. Exhibit D-3 conforms to these conditions and I find that it is a sufficient compliance with the Statute. The plaintiffs as the highest bidders have a right of action on Exhibit D-2, read along with the conditions of sale.

I have deferred this Judgment pending the receipt of the original proceedings of the Municipality. These are in the handwriting of the President and are not signed by the Secretary. But this is immaterial as the resolution confirming the sale relates back to Exhibit D-2.

The question of different conditions alleged to be proclaimed at the time of sale does not arise at this stage. The appeal should be set down for hearing on the merits.

Sankaramahalingam Chetty v. Muthulakshmi, 48 Ind. Cas. 860; 33 M. L. J. 740, followed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the 2nd Additional Subordinate Judge, JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to recover possession of certain lands. The parties are Muhammadans. It is necessary to make this clear at the outset, because in dealing with the parties' contentions in the Courts below, there has been some confusion of mind caused by reference to self-acquired property and even to Stridhanam (see paragraph 27 of the District Munsif's judgment in O. S. No. 38 of 1915.)

The plaintiffs are the widow and children of Sheik Muhammad Rowther, son of Muhammad Bava Rowther. Sheik Muhammad Rowther had one brother, who is the first defendant, and four sisters. There has been previous litigation on the subject of the suit property. Sheikh Muhammad Rowther brought a suit, O. S. No. 15 of 1905, to recover the same lands from first defendant on a plea of trespass in which he alleged that the properties were in plaintiff's possession but that it was necessary to have them delivered to him through Court to avoid any further dispute. The defendant took oath in that case and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. Another suit, O. S. No. 38 of 1915, was brought by the daughters of Isabibi Ammal, one of the sisters of Sheik Muhammad and the 1st defendant. That suit was dismissed on a finding that the property was the exclusive property of Sheik Muhammad.

Both the Courts below have held that the result of the second suit was to negative the right of the sisters to any share of the property and to enhance the shares of Sheik Muhammad and the first defendant. The plaintiffs have been given a preliminary decree for partition of the suit properties into two equal shares. I am of opinion that both the judgments are wrong. This suit does not purport to be a suit for partition of property between co-owners. The cause of action is stated to be the claim of the first defendant in O. S. No. 38 of 1915 to absolute right in the suit property, and the relief asked for is that the plaintiffs' 6-8ths' share should be made over to them. It is not alleged that the plaintiffs have obtained possession of the property at any date subsequent to the 10th of November 1905 when the first suit (O. S. No. of 1905) for possession of this property was dismissed and that they have since been dispossessed. As regards 'the plaintiffs' title to sole possession of the property, the decision in O. S. No. 15 of 1905 is res judicata as between them and the defendant Muhammad Esuf. The mere assertion of title in O. S. No. 38 of 1915 by a co-defendant will not give rise to any cause of action if the property was at that time in the defendant's possession. The present suit, if it be regarded as a suit to obtain possession against a trespasser, is barred by reason of the prior suit, O. S. No. 15 of 1905 upon the same title, vide Naina Muhammad Rowther v. Abdul Rahiman Rowther (1). If it be alleged that in the prior litigation the plaintiff asked for too much and, therefore, his suit was dismissed and that his representatives are now at least entitled to 6-8ths or some other smaller share of the property, then they are equally barred, because Sheikh Muhammad should have pleaded in that suit that, if he was not entitled to a decree for the whole property, he should at least be given a decree for his 6-8ths' share. That principle is clearly established by the decision just quoted.

It is argued that the effect of the judgment in O. S. No. 15 of 1905 was destroyed by the judgment in the subsequent suit, O. S. No. 38 of 1915, in which it was held that the property was the exclusive property of Sheikh Muhammad. That is not so. The judgment in O. S. No. 38 of 1915, disposed of a claim made by the daughters of one of Sheikh Muhammad's sisters to their share of this property upon partition. The finding that it was the exclusive property of Sheikh Muhammad will not operate as res judicata between co-defendants, as there was no active contest between them on this point and the decision of the question was not necessary in order to dispose of the suit of those plaintiffs: vide Sankaramahalingam Chetty v. Muthulakshmi (2). If the present suit is to be treated as a suit for partition of Sheikh Muhammad's share, then it is necessary that the plaint should be amended by properly stating the cause of action as the plaintiffs' demand for a partition to be made by their co-owner and his refusal. It will also be necessary to make all the members of the family parties to the suit. One of the sisters of Isa Bivi, Jeleika Bivi, is stated to be dead. The other two sisters Hamida Bivi and Muhammad Bivi, are parties in the connected suit for recovery of the house, O. S. No. 511 of 1918, but they have not been made parties to the present suit; nor has any one been put on the record as the legal representative of the deceased sister. The only order that I can make on the present second appeal is that, upon the plaintiffs paying all the costs of the defendants up to date within one month, they will be allowed to amend their plaint so as to claim the relief of partition of their share making all the children of Muhammad Bava or other legal representatives parties to the suit, within one month of this order, and upon their so doing, the suit will be remanded for re-trial, permitting the defendants to file fresh written statements to meet the plaintiffs' new claim for partition; and upon the plaintiffs' failure to do so, their suit will stand dismissed, with costs in this Court and in the Courts below reversing the decisions of the District Munsif and the Subordinate Judge. This order also disposes of the memorandum of objections which is dismissed.

— in pleadings, construction of--Conditional admission

It is permissible for a Tribunal to accept part and reject the rest of any witness's testimony. But an admission in a pleading cannot be so dissected, and if it is made subject to a condition it must either be accepted subject to the condition or not accepted at all.

If a party makes a qualified statement, that statement cannot be used against him apart from that qualification; an unfair use is not to be made of a party's statement, by trying to convert into a particular admission by him that which he never intended to be such an admission. N KRISHNABAI V. — of thumb impression on blank paper - Execution Burden of proof

An admission must be taken as a whole and not piecemeal.

A defendant's admission that he had put his thumb impression on a blank paper is not an admission of execution of any document and, therefore, does not shift the burden of proving the document. N DEVIDAS V. MAMOOJI, 20 N. L. R. 7; (1924) A. I. R. (N.) 103 104 adverse to the other co-owners. Not only possession by one co-owner but also an exclusion of the others or a denial of their title to their knowledge is essential to render such possession adverse. The same principle is applicable to the case of a transferee from one of several co-owners. Where he prescribes as a co-sharer, he must prove exclusion or denial of title as against the other co-sharers. But in the event of his having neither actual nor constructive notice of the common character of the property, he will be on the same footing as any ordinary transferee with an independent or invalid title or none.

— — — Co-sharers--Overt act.

The possession of one co-sharer is ordinarily the possession of all co-sharers; but the co-sharer in possession can convert his possession into adverse possession by an overt act showing unequivocally to the co-sharers that in future he intends to hold for himself alone. This adverse possession so begun cannot be stopped by the other co-sharers, merely by affirmations that they are co-sharers or by mere applications for partition. It is the business of those co-sharers, within limitation, actually and effectually to assert their rights and to break up the usurper's exclusive possession. L HIRA SINGH V. PUNJAB SINGH 113

Possession for twelve years or any other period prescribed by the law on an invalid title cannot perfect anything but that title. N DINA SINGH V. JAMAL SINGH 446 — — — Lawful and unlawful possession-- Adverse possession between co-sharers--Ouster--Assertion of hostile title.

An admitted or proved title subsists all through until complete adverse possession is established.

Possession is either lawful or unlawful and, in the absence of evidence, it must be assumed to be the former.

Possession is lawful when it is in virtue of a legal title.

Between two co-tenants, each has a title to the whole and also to his undivided moiety and each is said to be seized per myet per tout, i. e., each co-tenant has the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole.

Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster must be proved by the co-tenant in possession in order to bring out the success of the plea of adverse possession.

The fact that a party has not been in the enjoyment of the rents and profits of the property in suit does not establish a title by adverse possession in the co-tenant who has enjoyed such profits.

In order to establish adverse possession as between co-sharers there must be evidence of an open assertion of hostile title by one of them to the knowledge of the other. O INDEPRAL SINGH

Where on the death of an occupancy tenant without heirs, the landlords become entitled to resume the occupancy holding they can only do so subject to the rights created by the deceased tenant which the landlords failed to challenge within the period allowed by law. So that, if the holding is in possession of a mortgagee from the tenant, whose mortgage was not challenged by the landlords within one year of its creation, the landlords cannot resume possession of the holding without paying off the mortgagee. Held, (1) that the mortgage in favour of the plaintiff was illegal being in contravention of the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act, and conferred no title on the plaintiff;

(2) that the defendant having paid the rent to the original occupancy tenant the latter must be deemed to have resumed the holding;

A suit between rival claimants to an occupancy holding is triable exclusively by a Civil Court and is not covered by section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Once a matter has been decided by a Revenue Court it cannot be re-opened in a Civil Court.

When a matter has not been finally decided in a Revenue Court, for instance where an appeal is pending against the decision of an Assistant Collector, and the same question arises in a suit filed in a Civil Court over which the latter Court has jurisdiction, it is not precluded from deciding the question merely by reason of the fact that it has already been decided by a Revenue Court of first instance. A SURJAN SINGH v. UMARI SINGH 1008

s. 167—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Decree by Revenue Court—Declaratory suit in Civil Court, maintainability of.

The Civil Courts will not entertain a suit the object of which is to reverse a decision of a Revenue Court in a matter which is, under section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act, within the Revenue Court's exclusive jurisdiction, and if this is the substantial object of the suit it is immaterial that the plaintiff may have framed his relief in a form in which it could not have been granted by the Revenue Court. The Courts will look to the substance of the matter and not to the form.

Defendant obtained an ex parte decree in the Revenue Court for arrears of rent against the plaintiffs on the allegation that the latter were his sub-tenants. While the ex parte decree was still in force plaintiffs sued the defendant in the Civil Court for a declaration that they were joint occupancy tenants with him:

Held, that the object of the suit being to obtain from the Civil Court a reversal of the Revenue Court decree for arrears of rent, the suit was not maintainable. A GOVIND v. AMMAR 626

Nor should his pronouncement with respect of their credibility be put aside on mere calculations of probabilities by the Court of Appeal. There is no restriction on the discretion of the Appellate Courts in the consideration of the evidence but where the issue is simple and the only question is which set of witnesses is to be believed the verdict of a Judge trying the case should not be lightly disregarded. S FIRM OF JOSOMAL VALIRAM v. Arbitration Appointment of arbitrator Uberrima fides, necessity of Arbitrator related to one party, effect of Ex parte award, when can be set aside.

In case of an arbitration where a person is appointed by two parties to exercise judicial duties there should be uberrima fides on the part of all the parties concerned in relation to his selection and appointment and every disclosure which might in the least affect the minds of those who are proposing to submit their disputes to the arbitrament of any particular individual, as regards his selection and fitness for the post ought to be made, so that each party may have every opportunity of considering whether the reference to arbitration to that particular individual should or should not be made.

The fact that the arbitrator is related to one of the parties as his first paternal cousin does afford a real likelihood of an operation of prejudice on his part and the existence of such relationship with one of the parties unknown to the other disqualifies him from acting as an arbitrator. In such a case as the above it is not necessary, in seeking to have the award set aside, to prove actual bias or partiality on the part of the arbitrator or that the existence of the relationship had any operation on his mind.

An award passed ex parte will be set aside only if the absent party can convince the Court that he had sufficient cause for his non-appearance. S TRUSTEES OF THE FIRM MOTHARAM DOWLATRAM v. FIRM OF MAYADAS DOWLATRAM 521

An error of law which vitiates an award should be apparent on the face of the award itself or of any document so connected with the award as to form part of it. But where a specific question of law is specifically referred by parties to arbitrators and the latter arrive at a wrong decision of law, their award cannot be challenged though the error of law is apparent on the face of the award itself. Where, however, a specific question of law is not so referred, an erroneous decision of law may be attacked, provided such error appears on the face of the award itself or any document so closely connected as to form part of it. S MADHORAM v. The law casts upon an arbitrator no obligation to stamp an award and an award is complete though it is unstamped and, therefore, inadmissible in evidence.

its refusal. It would be contrary to justice to give leave to revoke a submission to a party who, as a consideration for a contract, had agreed to submit any disputes, whether of law or fact, which might arise, to arbitration, when he found the case going against him. The exercise of the power of giving leave to revoke is in general limited to cases where the arbitrators are exceeding their jurisdiction, or refusing jurisdiction, or failing to do all that their jurisdiction requires them to do, and the principle underlying the exercise of the power to revoke, is that the parties take the arbitrators for better or for worse, that their decision is final both as to law and fact, that unless a substantial miscarriage of justice may take place, leave ought not to be given, and it is no miscarriage of justice for a party to be injured by bad law which he has agreed to be bound by. A GAYA PRASAD v. 35 (c) Regulations, whether have force of law—Sale of house without sanction of Commanding Officer, validity of Cantonment tenure, land held on License.

The collection of rules known as the Army Regulations cannot be treated as rules having the force of law, they are departmental rules issued with a view to the regulation of administrative business in the Army Department.

A party guilty of entering into a fraudulent contract is entitled to recover the property conveyed to the other party under such a contract provided the fraudulent purpose of the contract has not been executed.

To enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud, the contemplated fraud must be effected; then, and then alone, does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with.

Plaintiffs' father conveyed certain property to the defendant in order to defraud his creditors. Subsequently, the property was attached by a creditor of the transferor in execution of a decree obtained by him against the latter, but it was released on the objection of the defendant. Several years later, plaintiffs sued to recover the property from the defendant on the ground that the transfer by their father in favour of the defendant was fictitious.

Held, that the property having been transferred to the defendant to effect a fraudulent purpose, and the contemplated fraud having been carried out plaintiffs could not recover the property from the defendant. Where property is ostensibly transferred by one person in favour of another under an arrangement that the latter shall hold possession of the property for the benefit of the former, the arrangement gives rise to a constructive trust and the transferee is bound to hold the property in trust for the transferor and not for any benefit of his own.

In such a case no question of adverse possession by the transferee can arise until he does some overt act to the knowledge of the transferor indicating an unequivocal intention to hold the property for his own benefit. O RAUNAQ ALI v. NAZIR HUSAIN, 11 O. L. J. 92 359

Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act (XI of 1859), s. 33, applicability of.

In order that section 33 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act may come into operation there must have been a sale for arrears of revenue. Where an estate is sold at a time when there are no arrears of revenue, the sale is not a sale for such arrears, and section 33 will have no application to such a case. C BILASI CHANDRA ROY v. RAJENDRA CHANDRA DAS ROY, 51 C. 776 661 — ss. 33, 34, applicability of Arrears, absence of—Sale by Collector—Suit to recover possession—Execution—Limitation.

Section 34 of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act applies only where a sale held under the Act is annulled by a final decree by a Civil Court. In other words, where a suit is brought under the provisions of section 33 of the Act, and a Civil Court annuls the sale on any of the grounds mentioned in the section, an execution petition must be presented within six months after the date of the decree, but when the suit is not one under the provisions of section 33 of the Act, section 34 of the Act has no operation whatever.

There is a clear distinction between a case where a sale is annulled and a case where the Court authoritatively recognises that there was no sale at all, and consequently disregards it and proceeds to give a decree for possession to the plaintiff. Where the sale is authorized, but there is a direct violation of the Statutory provision in conducting the sale, the suit must be one for annulment of the sale, and the Court has complete power to set aside the sale, provided the requirements of section 33 are complied with. But where the sale is not authorized, there is in law no sale, and, there being nothing to annul, all that the Civil Court does is to recognise that there is no sale and to pass a decree for possession in favour of the plaintiff.

Where an estate is not in arrears there is no authority in the Collector to put up the estate for sale, and a Civil Court has complete power to recognise authoritatively that there was no power in the Collector to put up the property to sale and to hold that there was in fact no sale at all. To such a case section 34 of the Bengal Revenue Sales Act has no application. PAT MUHAMMAD IDRIS v. LACHMAN DAS, (1924) Pat. 25; 5 P. L. T. 368 (1924) A. I. R. (Pat.) 504 303

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 25, 87—Landlord and tenant—Non-transferable occupancy holding—Abandonment, relinquishment, repudiation, what amounts to—Sale of holding in execution of decree—Tenant residing in homestead and cultivating land under transferee—Ejectment—Transferee, position of.

A non-transferable occupancy holding was sold in execution of a money-decree and a mortgage-decree against the tenants, but the latter took a tenancy under the transferee and continued to reside on their homestead land and to cultivate several plots comprised in the holding. In a suit by the landlord for ejectment of the transferee;

Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

Held, that there was no abandonment, relinquishment or repudiation of the holding by the tenants, and the landlord was not, therefore, entitled to evict either the tenants or their transferee.

Per Rankin, J.—A mere denial by an occupancy tenant of the landlord's title or of the relationship of landlord and tenant is not, by itself, a ground for eviction of the tenant, but if in a previous suit the tenant successfully denied the landlord's title, then, on the principle of estoppel by record, an eviction may take place.

A landlord who has a mere right of reversion expectant on the determination of the tenancy and who has not, as against his tenant, the right to end the tenancy, cannot maintain ejectment against a third person merely because that third person has no title in himself.

A transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding can claim no right as against the landlord but unless the landlord has a right to present possession, he cannot maintain ejectment against the tenant or his transferee. The only remedy which the landlord has against the transferee in such a case is to ask for a declaration that the transferee has not got the tenancy right in the landlord's property.

Semble: There can be no abandonment of an occupancy holding apart from the provisions contained in section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Per Mukerji, J. The terms "abandonment" "relinquishment" and "repudiation" are terms distinct and not interchangeable; though proof of one may be some evidence, though not conclusive, yet relevant for establishing facts and circumstances, which might go to constitute another.

Section 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, though it does not purport to define abandonment, plainly indicates what it is. The material elements are (i), that the raiyat should abandon his residence, and that he should do so voluntarily, without notice to his landlord, and without arranging for payment of his rent as it falls due, and (ii) that he should cease to cultivate the holding either by himself or by some other person.

Mere non-payment of rent is not evidence of abandonment or relinquishment, though non-payment of rent, coupled with non-occupation of land or other facts and circumstances, is evidence of an intention to abandon the holding or may amount to relinquishment.

The whole law of re-entry is based upon the principle that, so long as the tenancy is not terminated by abandonment, relinquishment or repudiation, the tenancy interposes and operates as a barrier and the landlord cannot re-enter. C RAMMESH CHANDRA MITRA v. — s. 48, applicability of—Mortgage by occupancy tenant—Kabuliyat in favour of mortgagee—Mortgagor, whether under-raiyat.

An occupancy tenant executed a zarpeshgi deed in respect of a portion of his occupancy holding for a period of nine years in consideration of an advance in cash in favour of the plaintiff.

Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

iff. The latter was to enter into possession and take the profits arising out of the cultivation of the land in lieu of interest on the loan. In the event of the principal sum not being paid off at the end of the term, the zarpeshgidar was to remain in possession upon the condition stipulated in the deed until re-payment of the principal in Jeth of any succeeding year. The property was also hypothecated to secure re-payment of the principal sum advanced if the zarpeshgidar should be dispossessed. Two days later the mortgagor executed a kabuliyat in favour of the mortgagee whereby he took the mortgaged land on lease for the term of the mortgage at a certain rent.

Held, (1) that the zarpeshgi was a mortgage and not a lease;

(2) that the zarpeshgidar did not become a raiyat under the mortgage;

(3) that, consequently, the mortgagor did not become an under-raiyat under the mortgage;

(4) that, therefore, section 18 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable to the case and the mortgagor was bound to pay the rent stipulated for in the kabuliyat. PAT TILAKDHARI SINGH v. CHATURGUN BIND, (1924) Pat. 4; 3 (Pat.) 266. 923

— ss. 50, 102, 103B, 115—Record of Rights—Presumption of correctness, extent of Presumption of fixity of rent, applicability of Particulars under s. 102 not actually recorded.

The presumption contained in section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only to the actual entries in the Record of Rights as finally published and to nothing else. The presumption does not extend to the orders of the Settlement Officers on which the entries are based.

When certain persons are entered in the Record of Rights as tenure-holders, no presumption arises as to whether they are or are not permanent tenure-holders or tenure-holders at fixed rates.

The presumption arising under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act only ceases to apply by reason of section 115 of the Act when the particulars required by the order of the Local Government directing the Survey and Record of Rights to be prepared have been in fact recorded. PAT KAMALUDDIN AHMAD v. The sub-division of a tenure does not operate as a breach of the continuity of the tenure. If the different parts into which the tenure is divided are held at a proportionate rent and the aggregate rent equals the original rents, the tenure-holders are still entitled to the benefit of the presumption arising under section 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. C GOUR KRISHNA SARKAR v. in respect of which the presumption laid down in section 590 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act is claimed, were not in existence in the condition in which they were recorded in the Record of Rights in certain years, the onus is shifted on the tenants to prove that their present holdings are made up of other holdings which have also borne a uniform rental. PAT NAND LAL CHAUBEY v. — s. 60—Proprietor ijaradar—Entire estate—Rent payable to two proprietors—Rent payable to third person—Object of section.

Section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act deals with cases where rent is due to the proprietor of an estate. An ijaradar is not a proprietor, his case, therefore, is not covered by the section.

Although a proprietor may be the owner of an estate or a part of an estate, section 60 merely speaks of "proprietor of that estate," which indicates an entire estate. Therefore, none of the several persons, who are individually registered as proprietors of the fractional share of an estate, is proprietor of the estate.

The case where rent is payable to two or more proprietors, the extent of whose interest is required to be registered under the second part of section 78 of the Land Registration Act, is not dealt with by section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The words "that the rent is due to a third person," in the concluding portion of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, refer to a third person whose name is not registered at all.

The object of section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is to afford indemnity to tenants who pay rent to the person whose name is registered under the Act, and to debar them from pleading in defence to a claim for rent by such person that the rent is due to a third person; but the section has not provided for cases where the names of all the part proprietors have been registered under the Land Registration Act.

Section 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not concerned with questions of title. C PROMODH CHANDRA v. HARISH CHANDRA, 27 C. W. N. 888; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 121 7

In a proceeding under section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Sub-Divisional Officer passed the following order:—"Parties heard. The khasra seems fair and is accepted. The landlord's share, if not accepted, may be sold and proceeds deposited in the Treasury." There was a subsequent order to the effect, "Sale-proceeds deposited into the Treasury. Case disposed of."

Held, (1) that both orders must be read together as a whole, and, taken together, they amounted to a final order under section 70 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, enforceable as a decree;

(2) that a Civil Court, therefore, had no jurisdiction to pass a decree for rent in respect of the period dealt with by the orders of the Sub-Divisional Officer. PAT RAY BINODE BIHARI BOSE v. TOKHI SINGH, (1924) Pat. 211 465

Bengal Tenancy Act—contd.

— s. 103 B (3), Ch. X—Record of Rights, entry relating to local custom—Presumption—Burden of proof—Custom entitling raiyats to abatement of rent on inundation, whether unreasonable or vague.

An entry in the Record of Rights of a mauzah that if inundation takes place the *raiya*s are to get a rateable or proportionate deduction of rent from their landlords, is an entry of a local custom, and is not outside the purview of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The presumption of correctness laid down in section 103 B (3) of the Act, therefore, applies to the entry, the effect of the presumption being that the burden of proving the custom recited in the entry is taken from off the shoulders of the tenants, and the landlord is bound to prove that no such custom exists.

The custom recited in the above entry is neither unreasonable nor vague. C UMESH CHANDRA DUTTA v. CHOWDHURY JAMINI NATH MALLICK 836

— s. 103 B (3), Ch. X—Suit for rent—Non-agricultural land—Record of Rights, entry in, whether admissible in evidence.

Although non-agricultural lands are not subject to the provisions of Chapter X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, an entry in the Record of Rights with respect to the amount of rent of such land, is admissible in evidence, in a suit for the recovery of rent, as corroborative of other evidence in the suit, although the weight to be attached to such entry would depend on the circumstances of each particular case. C RAKIMJAN v. AMAR KRISHNA CHOUDHURY 169

— s. 153—Dispute as to amount of rent payable—Appeal, second, whether lies.

Where, in answer to a suit for rent, the tenant pleads that the rent claimed by the landlord in respect of fruit trees is not payable, the question is one relating to the amount of rent payable and a second appeal is, therefore, competent in the case. PAT RAMESHWAR SINGH v. WAZUL HAQUE 463

— s. 153—"Has decided a question of title," whether qualify decree or order—Order passed in execution, what it must decide.

The words "has decided a question relating to title, etc.," in section 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, qualify both decree and order. Therefore, an order passed in execution of a decree, whether the decree is appealable or not, must be an order which itself decides a question relating to title or to some interest in land as between parties having conflicting claims thereto. C JOYMANGLA SEN v. within the time prescribed by the section, that is to say, within one year of the date of the sale or the date on which the purchaser first had notice of the incumbrance.

Under section 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act once the Collector has issued notice of annulment, the incumbrance must be deemed to have been annulled. This does not, however, mean that the validity of the notice and the consequent annulment of the incumbrance cannot afterwards be called in question. The effect of the section is to cast the burden of proof upon the person questioning the validity of the notice. PAT NAND KISHORE CHAUDHURI v. RAMESHWAR SINGH, 2 P. L. R. 19; (1924) A. I. Sch. III, Art. 3—Landlord and tenant—

Suit by tenant to recover possession of holding—Dispossession by landlord—Limitation.

Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act applies to a case where dispossession has been by a person who at the time of dispossession, in whatever way the dispossession might take place, either through a civil wrong or by means of criminal force, occupies the position of a landlord or possesses the character of a landlord and has the capacity of a landlord towards the person dispossessed.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of a holding on the allegation that she had been dispossessed from it by the defendant landlord in execution of a fraudulent and collusive decree obtained by him against a third person.

Held, that the suit was governed by Article 3 of Schedule III to the Bengal Tenancy Act. C. KEDAR NATH BISWAS v. KAMINI SUNDARI DASNYA, 28 C. W. N. 482; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 623 514

Bengal Touji Manual, rule 61—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 50—Payment of revenue by Revenue Money Order—Time of payment—Payment to Post Office, whether payment in time.

Under the rules contained in the Bengal Touji Manual, 1918, the question whether a remittance of land revenue remitted by Revenue Money Order reaches the Collector in time depends not on receipt of the money or even of the money order form at the Treasury, but on the date when the Post Master fills the Treasury voucher.

Under rule 61 of the Bengal Touji Manual, 1918, read with section 50 of the Contract Act, a payment of land revenue to the Post Office by means of a Revenue Money Order before the last day of payment is a good payment in time. C. Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act (XIV of 1914), Sch. II, r. 43—Sale in execution of certificate for arrears of cess—Judgment-debtor, whether can be purchaser—Sale, validity of—Purchase by co-sharer, whether for benefit of all co-sharers

The prohibition contained in r. 43 of Schedule II to the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act applies only to a sale of a tenure in execution of a certificate for arrears of rent due from the tenure. It does not apply to sales held in execution of certificates for any other dues, such as, cess. An execution with respect to a certificate for cess is, therefore, governed by the general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, which enjoins no prohibition on a judgment-debtor making a purchase in execution.

The purchase by a judgment-debtor of a tenure or holding with respect to which the prohibition contained in r. 43 of Schedule II to the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act applies, does not in itself render the sale void, but the sale can be avoided upon an application made by the decree-holder or any other person interested in the sale.

Where a tenure is sold owing to the default of all the co-sharers and is purchased by one of them, the purchase does not enure for the benefit of all the co-sharers. PAT. MASUDANIAL v. RAM GUJLAM SAGU, 3 Pat. 458; 5 P. L. T. 447; (1924) Pat. 240 807

Where it is absolutely essential for the determination of a suit to decide a question inter se between co-defendants and the question is decided after contest between the co-defendants it operates as res judicata between the contending co-defendants. N MUNNA v. SUKLAL 987

— s. 11—Res judicata—Co-defendants—Fraud—Party, whether can plead his own fraud—Estoppel.

No estoppel can be created between co-defendants so as to invoke the doctrine of res judicata unless there was a litis contestatis as between the defendants inter se.

C sold certain properties to P and the latter sold the same to R who in turn transferred the same to A. On C being adjudicated an insolvent, the Official Assignee challenged the alienations as being not bona fide and as being without consideration. The Trial Court and the Appellate Court set aside the alienations on the ground of want of good faith but the appellate judgment contained expressions of opinion that the alienations did not bear consideration. In a suit by A against R for damages for breach of covenant for quiet enjoyment :

Held, (1) that the decision in the insolvency proceedings as to the fraudulent nature of the transaction was not res judicata in the present suit ;

(2) that the defendant who was a party to the fraud was also estopped from relying upon the fraudulent character of the transfer so as to defeat the plaintiff in this suit. M RAMASWAMY NAICKER v. ALAMELU AMMAL, 46 M. L. J. 298; (1924) M. W. N. 204; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 604 921

— s. 11—Res judicate, essential requisites of—Finding in unnecessary suit, whether constitute res judicata.

The only conditions necessary to constitute a matter res judicata are that, —

(1) the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue either actually or constructively in the former suit ;

(2) the former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim ;

(3) the parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit ;

(4) the Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised ;

(5) the matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the first suit.

It is not a necessary condition that the suit must be one which the plaintiff was bound to institute, there is no warrant in law for the proposition that a finding given in a suit which is perhaps an entirely useless suit and need not have been instituted at all does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit relating to the same matter if the other requirements of law as laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code have been fulfilled and a finding given in a suit which the plaintiff need not have instituted, but has in fact instituted is as much res judicata as one given in a suit which he was bound to institute. L HATHI KHAN v. If a person joined as defendant in a mortgage suit has a title paramount to that of the mortgagor, he is not bound to set it up by way of defence to the mortgage suit and his omission to do so will not, therefore, render this question of his title res judicata against him. N HEMRAJ v. — s. 11—Res judicata—Suit dismissed—Findings adverse to defendant.

A decision cannot be said to be based on a finding unless an appeal can lie against that finding and it cannot operate as res judicata unless the decision upon such a finding is appealed against.

A suit for ejectment against a sub-tenant was dismissed on the ground that the defendant was not served with a valid notice under law. It was pleaded that the defendant was an occupancy tenant not a sub-tenant as alleged and the plea was found against defendant. In a subsequent suit for ejectment the defendant is not precluded by reason of res judicata from pleading that he is an occupancy tenant. N GIRJABAI v. PURUSHOTTAMDAS 147

An order to a party to pay process-fees "at once" militates against both the spirit and the letter of O. XLVIII, r. 1 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. The fixation of time within which to pay process-fees conveys an idea of giving reasonable facilities to a litigant who seeks the help of the Court in the matter of summoning witnesses, to obey the order. This means that the Court with due regard to the provisions of O. XVI, r. 9, of the Code makes terms with the party who requires its help and declares to him that it will try to procure the attendance of witnesses to be summoned for the hearing provided the process-fees are paid within the time fixed by it, and that if he delays such payment he does so at his own risk. To call upon him to pay process-fees at once is virtually to insist on immediate payment of process-fees and to decline to help in the matter of enforcing the attendance of witnesses and in effect to penalise the default by dismissing the suit ultimately. N PANDU v. In a suit on a mortgage against two mortgagors it was held that the mortgage was valid as against one of them only and the suit was decreed as against him and was dismissed as against the other. When the mortgaged properties were about to be sold the absolved mortgagor filed an objection that the properties belonged to him alone and should not be sold, and that if they were sold, it should be proclaimed at the time of the sale that the judgment-debtor had no right, title, or interest in the properties;

Held, that the objector was a party to the suit in which the decree was passed and that the objection related to the satisfaction of the decree, within the meaning of section 17 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the objection should, therefore, be decided on the merits. A MAHADEI v. J and A were two partners in a certain business. J obtained a decree for money against A in his personal capacity which was put into execution and certain moveable properties belonging to the partnership were attached upon which J preferred a claim and his half share was released on his agreeing to the other half being sold as the property of A. In the meantime, one S obtained a decree against J and A in respect of monies due from the partnership and attached and sold all the moveables belonging to the partnership including the half share already attached in execution of D's decree who then applied for rateable distribution. J objected to the rateable distribution and the Executing Court overruling the objections ordered rateable distribution but the order was reversed by the District Judge on appeal:

Held, Per Walsmsley, J.—That no appeal lay to the District Judge as the addition of D, who was a stranger to the suit, to the proceedings had destroyed the sanctity of the element of identity which was a necessary ingredient of a proceeding under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and that that section was, therefore, inapplicable.

Per Mukerji, J.—(1) that the order of the Executing Court was passed in a matter relating to the satisfaction of the decree between parties to the suit and was one falling within the purview of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and was, therefore, appealable;

(2) that the conduct of J in agreeing that the half share of moveables may be sold as A's property amounted to a declaration that the partnership had ceased and had the effect of divesting the said half share of moveables of its character as partnership property and that the provisions of section 262 of the Contract Act were, therefore, no longer applicable to such property;

(3) that, consequently, the property was liable to rateable distribution.

An order under section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code is not appealable unless it also comes under section 47 of the Code and satisfies all the requirements thereof.

One object of section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property the necessity of each and every one attaching and separately getting the property sold. The other object of the section is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property. C DWARKADAS v. The matter was treated as one under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and eventually the Court converted the proceeding into a suit and decided that the assignment in favour of one of the parties must prevail over the assignment in favour of the other. The latter filed an application for revision against the order.

Held, that no revision lay against the order passed by the Trial Court, for if the matter was one arising under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, the order was open to appeal and not to revision, and if it arose out of a suit the remedy again was by way of appeal against the decree in the suit, but if, on the other hand, it was one to be treated as falling under O. XXI, r. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code, it could not be said that by trying it in the form of a suit, the Court had passed an order without jurisdiction. PAT RAN BAHADUR SINGH v. The power of a Court to pass a consent decree is restricted to matters covered by the suit. But if the agreement refers to matters extraneous to the suit forming consideration for the compromise or settlement of the matter included in the suit, such extraneous terms should also be recorded in the decree. It does not, however, follow that such extraneous terms can be enforced in execution of that decree. In fact, they can be enforced only by a separate suit. C ARJUN KAPALI v. A Receiver may be appointed even when the property has not been attached.

In the absence of reservation of any powers, the Receiver has full powers of the owner with reference to the property when his appointment is made in the form provided in the Code of Civil Procedure, expressly giving full powers under the provisions of O. XL of the Code.

The validity of the Receiver's appointment does not depend on his taking possession of the property, but the powers commence immediately on his appointment by the Court.

The appointment of a Receiver operates as an injunction against the parties, their agents and persons claiming under them from interfering with his possession except by permission of the Court.

The owner of the property is incompetent to deal with the property including a lease from the date on which the Receiver is appointed in respect of the same.

The failure of the Court to pass orders on the reference of a Receiver does not invalidate a lease if it was within his competence to grant it under the terms of his appointment. N DEO BAKSH v. KALURAM, 7 N. L. J. 16 811

— s. 60 (m), O. XXXVIII, r. 5—Attachment before judgment, application for, form of—Affidavit containing necessary allegations—Contingent debt, whether can be attached—Garnishee, whether can appeal against garnishee order.

When a party to a suit feels himself aggrieved by a decree or an order from which he has a right of appeal, the question as to whether the decree or order appealed from is to be revised at his instance, he not being materially affected by it, is one for the Appellate Court to decide at the hearing of the appeal.

A debt in order to be attachable need not be ascertained but must be accruing or have accrued, that is to say, a debitum in presenti solveundum in futuro.

Defendant first party sold certain property to defendants second party and a sum of three lakhs was left with the vendees to pay off a mortgage on the property. It was stipulated that if the mortgage amount turned out to be less than three lakhs the balance should be paid to the vendor. Plaintiff filed a suit against the defendants to recover a certain amount which he alleged was the balance of the unpaid purchase-money in respect of the same property which he had sold to defendant first party. He made an application under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code for attachment before judgment of the sum of three lakhs which was in the hands of the defendants second party. The application did not contain the allegations necessary to bring it under O. XXXVIII, r. 5, but the affidavit accompanying it contained the requisite averments. The Trial Court granted the application. Both sets of defendants appealed:

Held, (1) that although the application was not in proper form the defect was cured by the affidavit accompanying the application;

(2) that as the defendants second party were prevented by the order complained of from paying the money even to the mortgagees and were likely to be prejudiced by the order, their appeal was maintainable;

(3) that the interest of defendant first party in the sum of three lakhs in the hands of defendants second party was a merely contingent interest which was not liable to attachment under section 60 (m) of the Civil Procedure Code, and the order of the Trial Court must, therefore, be set aside. C SUGHRODAS REKHANDAS v. Two mortgage-decrees were passed in respect of the same property and were put in execution and were sent to the Collector for execution. The decree-holder under the subsequent mortgage paid off the decree on the earlier mortgage and the property was sold free from incumbrances and was purchased by the decree-holder under the subsequent mortgage. He then applied to the Collector for an order declaring that the purchase-money should be paid first towards the satisfaction of the earlier decree and the balance towards his own decree and that the property should be deemed to have been sold free from incumbrances. This application was refused:

Held, (1) that the duty of the Collector was to find out the best method of raising the money for the satisfaction of the decree passed by the Civil Court and he had no jurisdiction to decide as to how the purchase-money was to be employed;

(2) that the consent of the decree-holder did not confer any such jurisdiction on the Collector and the decree-holder was not, therefore, bound by the order of the Collector refusing his application;

(3) that the only way of dealing with the matter was to declare that the property had been sold free from incumbrances and that the purchase-money was to be employed first towards the satisfaction of the earlier decree and the balance towards part-payment of the subsequent decree. A ABDUL SHAKUR v. CIVIL Procedure Code—1908—contd.

— ss. 96, 97—Preliminary and final decrees—Appeal against preliminary decree—Final decree passed after filing of appeal—Procedure.

Where the dates of a preliminary decree and a final decree permit an appellant to challenge both decrees within the time allowed by law, it is unreasonable to allow him to avoid the provisions of the Court Fees Act and to obtain a reversal of the final decree by a circuitous method by appealing against the preliminary decree only, when the direct method is open. In such a case the proper course is to allow the appellant a reasonable time within which to amend his appeal.

Where, however, an appeal against the preliminary decree is filed before the final decree is made and the dates of the two decrees do not allow an appeal against both being filed, the subsequent passing of the final decree would not render the appeal against the preliminary decree nugatory, and the final decree would depend on the preliminary decree and if the latter is set aside the former would fall with it. S ISHAK v. At the adjourned hearing Counsel for the plaintiff did not appear and the Court proceeded to dispose of the suit under O. XVII, r. 3, of the Civil Procedure Code and eventually dismissed it:

Held, (1) that the Court was entitled to proceed under O. XVII, r. 3 of the Code and was not bound to proceed under r. 2 of the Order;

An order passed under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code refusing to interfere in revision with an order of a Subordinate Judge passed under section 151 of the Code restoring to file a suit which had been disposed of upon an alleged compromise between the parties is not a "final order" within the meaning of section 109 of the Code and leave cannot, therefore, be granted to appeal to His Majesty in Council against such an order.

An order is a final one under section 109 of the Civil Procedure Code if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties.

Section 105 of the Civil Procedure Code is inapplicable to appeals to His Majesty in Council. M JOHN JOSEPH BARRO v. MRS. S. S. BARRO, 46 M. L. J. 357; 19 L. W. 458; 34 M. L. T. 112; (1924) M. W. N. 380 938

In a suit for redemption of a mortgage, the plaintiff based his title on a legacy under a Will and also on a lease. The defendants denied plaintiff's title under both heads. There was a specific issue as to the genuineness of the Will but none as to the lease, except the general issue as to whether plaintiff's suit was maintainable. The Court of first instance found the Will to be genuine and decreed the suit but the Appellate Court reversed the finding and dismissed the suit. The question of the lease was not gone into in either of the Courts. On second appeal to the High Court:

Held, (1) that it was primarily the duty of the Court to frame the necessary issues though in framing issues parties were entitled to be heard;

(2) that the proper course to follow in the case was not to set aside the decree and remand the whole case including the question of genuineness of the Will to be gone into again ab initio, but to frame issues under O. Held, (1) that the order of the High Court was of a merely interlocutory character, no final decision having been arrived at as to the relative position of the parties or as to the liability of the defendant to render accounts to the plaintiffs;

An order dismissing an application under section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code for extension of the time limited for the payment of money under a decree is open to revision.

A suit was found to have been undervalued and the Court called upon the plaintiff to amend the valuation and pay additional Court-fees. The plaintiff, thereupon, applied for leave to continue the suit in forma pauperis, which was refused. The plaint was then rejected on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to make the necessary amendment and to pay additional Court-fees. The plaintiff filed a revision against the order refusing to allow him to continue the suit in forma pauperis:

Held, (1) that the order complained against had merged in the order rejecting the plaint;

(2) that the latter order was a decree and was appealable as such, and that, therefore, the application for revision was not maintainable.

The remedy by way of revision is an exceptional remedy and is to be resorted to only when there is no other remedy available to the aggrieved party. L AZIM BIBI v. IMTIAZ BEGAM 604

Where an order under O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code is passed without the conditions laid down in the rule being complied with, the order is without jurisdiction and may be made the subject of revision.

Where, however, the Trial Court has exercised a judicial discretion in allowing the suit to be withdrawn, the High Court will not interfere in revision. The Trial Court cannot be said to have exercised a judicial discretion where it has misunderstood the nature of the conditions laid down in O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The failure of a plaintiff to adduce evidence to identify the property in dispute as belonging to himself is not a "formal defect" within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 1 of the Civil Procedure Code, so as to justify the Court in granting leave to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. O DAULA v. DWARKA PAL 121

— s. 115, O. XLI, r. 33—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Revision—Court, whether can vary decree in favour of non-petitioner—Discretion of Court.

Revisional jurisdiction is a discretionary jurisdiction, and the discretion should not ordinarily be exercised in favour of a negligent party. Where, however, an erroneous view of the lower Court has contributed to the bringing about of a result which requires to be redressed, the High Court would be failing in its duties if it were to refuse to exercise its revisional powers of supervision and correction which it exercises even suo motu for undoing any injustice which may have been done by decisions of lower Courts to litigants in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court.

The High Court can deal with a case under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code or section 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, without there being any application by any of the parties, and in special cases can apply the principle underlying the provisions of r. 33 of O. XLI of the Code, to applications in revision. N RANGRAO v. PANDURANG 736

— s. 115 (c) — "Acting illegally," meaning of.

The expression "acting illegally" in section 115 (c) does not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as "acting with material irregularity" does. This part of the clause was advisedly left open in indefinite language in order to empower the High Court to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of subordinate Courts, the justification for the interference being determined upon the grossness and palpableness of the error complained of and upon the gravity of injustice resulting from it. C SATISH CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE v. erroneous interpretation of decree, whether can be restored.

The power of a Court to order restitution is by no means confined to the terms of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code. It is the inherent power of a Court to do what is right and proper under the circumstances which have happened.

When under a wrong interpretation of a decree the Court executing the decree delivers possession of the disputed property to a party who is not entitled to possession of it, and the interpretation adopted by it is subsequently held to be erroneous, the Court has ample jurisdiction to restore the party who was dispossessed by the erroneous order of the Court to possession of the property. PAT KAMLANATH JHA v. — s. 151—Minor not properly represented—Decree against minor nullity—Decree declared not binding—Power of Court to revive original suit against minor—Inherent powers of Court.

A decree which declares that a prior decree obtained against minors was not binding upon them on the ground that they were not validly represented therein has merely the effect of remitting the parties to their original rights and does not involve the re-trial afresh of the earlier suit. Therefore, the Court which originally disposed of that suit has no jurisdiction to restore the suit to its file and re-try it.

A Court has no inherent powers under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code to restore a suit once disposed of or to add parties to it who were not represented at the original trial.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be called to aid to justify an act, which instead of being necessary for the ends of justice or to prevent abuse of the process of the Court, not only causes or is likely to cause incalculable mischief but also perpetrates injustice to third persons who are neither parties to the suit nor bound by the decree passed therein. N PANNALAL v. ss. 151, 152—Misdescription of property in plaint—Error—Accidental slip or omission—Deliberate error—Fraud—Duty of Court—Inherent power of Court—Limitation.

In order to attract the application of the provisions of section 152 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the error must be a natural consequence of an accidental slip or omission. The mere misdescription of the property in the plaint and the repetition of the error in the decree will not suffice.

Where an error is deliberate, it is settled law that the provisions of section 152, Civil Procedure Code, cannot be invoked for the purpose of correcting such errors.

In the case of a deliberate error, the person committing it is guilty of fraud on the Court and when the fraud is brought to the notice of the Court the latter cannot let it stand and countenance its perpetration, lapse of time being immaterial. The action of the Court under such circumstances would clearly rest on the provisions of section 151, Civil Procedure Code, and the aggrieved party cannot be left to seek his remedy by a regular suit.

Under section 151 the Court has the inherent power to act ex debito iustitiæ and to do that real and substantial justice for which it alone exists.

There are certain limitations on the powers of the Court acting either under section 151 or 152, Civil Procedure Code, even an accidental error should not be amended if third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous judgment in the interval. O MATA DIN SINGH v. Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Where the party intended to be sued and substantially sued has been misdescribed in the cause title, there is complete power in the Court to make the necessary correction without any regard to lapse in time.

Where, however, there are two known persons in existence and plaintiff brings his suit against one of them and afterwards applies to have the other brought on the record as a defendant on the ground that he all along intended to sue the other, and in substance sued the other, and no question of representation arises, the case is not one of misdescription, and the Court will be justified in refusing leave to bring the real defendant on the record at a time when the suit has become barred by time against him.

Although it is, as a general rule, desirable in mortgage-suits to exclude all issues between the parties except those immediately concerned with the mortgage-suit itself, the Court may, in certain cases, if it thinks fit, allow other issues to be determined in such a suit, even if they depend upon separate causes of action. Under O. II, r. 4, of the Civil Procedure Code a plaintiff in a redemption suit may ask to be put in possession of the mortgaged property, and where the defendants raising a paramount title are those in possession of the property and likely hereafter, if their differences are not settled by the mortgage-suit, to resist the possession of the plaintiff, it would, in many cases, be very convenient to allow the issues which have been raised, to be determined in the mortgage suit so that after determination of those issues the plaintiff may know whether he will or will not get undisturbed possession of the property instead of having to bring a separate suit later on. P KHUB LAL UPADHYA v. When a date is fixed for the plaintiff to attend and find out what date has been fixed for the appearance of the defendant, and the plaintiff fails to attend on that date, the Court ought to fix a date for the appearance of the defendant, and to proceed with the suit under O. duly served on him, the onus is on him to establish the absence of due service.

Where service of summons has been effected by delivering it to the defendant personally, the service is complete, and no irregularity by the process-server or other ministerial officer of the Court such as the omission of the process-server to obtain the signature of the defendant or to affix a copy of the summons to the door of his house will invalidate it.

O. VI, r. 17—Amendment—Discretion

The powers of allowing amendments under the new Civil Procedure Code are much wider than those under the old Code.

The discretion that vests in Courts in the matter of allowing amendments of pleadings is always regulated by sound principles of law. It is to be exercised in a judicial manner and an amendment should not be arbitrarily refused.

To disclose further details of facts which support a cause of action already sued upon is not to introduce a new relief or a new cause of action in the plaint and no prejudice can result to the defendant especially when he has sought the disclosure or discovery. N. SITARAM v. NANDRAM 234

O. VI, r. 17 Amendment of plaint, when to be allowed.

All amendments of a plaint should be allowed which are intended to shorten litigation and to put the case of the plaintiff more eminently and clearly, if by reason of the plaintiff's case being misconceived in the first instance, it has not been put in proper form. N. SHANKAR v. MURARJI 510

O. VI, r. 17—Amendment, when allowed—

Plaintiff, whether can set up fresh claim—Description of defendant, correction of.

A plaintiff should not be allowed by amendment to set up fresh claims barred by limitation.

The general rule enacted in O. VI, r. 17, Civil Procedure Code, permitting amendment of pleadings to determine the real questions in controversy between the parties is subject to the limitation that the case tried must be consistent with the case originally laid and that the state of facts and equities and grounds of relief originally alleged and pleaded should not be departed from.

A suit for settlement of partnership accounts was instituted against the firm of P. C. carrying on business by their Managing Partner, P. J. Subsequently, the plaintiff applied for permission to amend the description of the defendant, substituting the description "P. J. carrying on business in the name and style of P. C.":

Held, that it was a case of mere misdescription of the defendant who was on the record and fully aware of the nature of the relief sought and of

O. IX, r. 9—Dismissal of suit for default—Restoration, application for—Sufficient cause—Duty of Court—Rules of procedure, object of.

Where a suit is dismissed in default and an application is made for the restoration of the suit, the Court ought to institute an enquiry into the merits of the application and should not surrender its jurisdiction to the dictation of the defendant.

On a suit being called on for hearing plaintiff's agent after informing the Reader of the Court, went to call Counsel who was present in the compound of the Court, but before the agent or Counsel could return to the Court-room the suit was dismissed for default. On an application for restoration of the suit being made the defendant agreed to the restoration of the suit provided the plaintiff paid Rs. 300 to him. The Court made an order in accordance with the terms proposed by the defendant:

Held, (1) that the suit should not have been dismissed without waiting for plaintiff's agent or Counsel;

(2) that the Court should not have passed the order for restoration at the dictation of the defendant;

(3) that there was sufficient cause for restoration of the suit without imposing any conditions on the plaintiff.

— O. XI, r. 21—Order directing discovery—Procedure—Order of dismissal, when should be made.

The terms of O. XI, r. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code contemplate two orders being made: (1) an order for the answer to the interrogatories or for the discovery or inspection of documents, as the case may be, within a specified time; and (2) upon the failure to comply with such an order, a further order dismissing the suit.

It is desirable that this course should ordinarily be followed and an order dismissing the suit should not be made unless the Court is satisfied that the plaintiff is endeavouring to avoid giving a fair and proper discovery. C JAGANNATH MOTI LAL v. BALA PRASAD ARJUNAS 859

— O. XIII, rr. 1, 2—Documents, production of, at late stage—Admission—Discretion of Court.

Rule 2 of O. XIII of the Civil Procedure Code gives no discretion to the Court to receive documentary evidence at a later stage than that mentioned in the previous rule unless good cause is shown to the satisfaction of the Court for the non-production thereof.

The scope of the rule has sometimes been enlarged by allowing the late production of documents in cases where it is quite obvious that no prejudice would arise to the other party by their late production and where the genuineness of the documents sought to be admitted is beyond all question.

The object of the Legislature in enacting this rule was to prevent fraud by the late production of suspicious documents and not to shut out formal evidence beyond suspicion such as certified copies of public documents or records of judicial proceedings.

But the mere fact that a document has been in existence for more length of time before proceedings were instituted is not in itself a sufficiently good cause for allowing it to be produced at a late stage of the proceedings PAT TAIBUNNISSA BEGUM v. — O. XVII, rr. 2, 3, distinction between—Procedure under r. 3—Remedy of aggrieved party—Appeal—Appellate Court, power of.

No valid distinction can be drawn between action taken under O. XVII, r. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code and action taken under the provisions of O. IX of the Code. Order XVII, r. 2, refers back to O. IX and gives the Court permission to decide the case in one of the ways prescribed by the latter Order.

Order XVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code is, however, different; it does not refer back to O. IX in any way, and a decision given under it is given on the merits. In such a case the remedy of the aggrieved party is by way of an appeal from the decree, and if the Appellate Court finds that the Trial Court was wrong in proceeding under the rule it has jurisdiction to set aside the decree and remand the case to the Trial Court for disposal according to law.

Rule 3 of O. XVII of the Civil Procedure Code applies where two elements combine, viz., (1) the adjournment must have been at the instance of a party, and (2) there must be materials on the record for the Court to proceed to decide the suit. It is immaterial, however, whether the defendant is present or absent. O RAMESHAR DUT SINGH v. MAHARAJA JAQJIT SINGH 340

O. XXI, r. 16, whether mandatory

Assignment of decree—Notice—Judgment-debtor present in Court, effect of—Transmission of order in Council to lower Courts, application for, failure to make, effect of.

The provisions of O. XXI, r. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code are of a mandatory character and non-compliance with them renders all proceedings in execution void.

Where, however, it is shown that the judgment-debtors had notice of the application by being present when the petition for substitution was being considered by the Court, the mere fact that a written notice was not served on them will not nullify the proceedings.

An application under O. XXI, r. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code made during the pendency of execution proceedings is not an application for fresh execution but an application for the continuation of the pending execution case.

Order XXI, r. 16 of the Civil Procedure Code requires notice of the application for execution, and not of the assignment, to be given to the transferor and the judgment-debtor, and, therefore, where the assignee applies during the pendency of the execution case to continue it, he does not apply for fresh execution and no notice under

O. XXI, r. 71—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 230—Auction-sale, parties to—Auction-purchaser's default—Re-sale resulting in deficit—Judgment-debtor, right of—Plea of agency when can be sustained—Interest, whether can be recovered.

In a Court auction-sale, the auction purchaser is one party to the contract; the other party to the contract is not the judgment-debtor or the decree-holder but the Court itself. In selling property in Court-auction, the Court acts under the statutory powers given to it by the Code and not as the agent of any party and the contract that is made when the bid is accepted and confirmed by the Court is one between the Court on the one side and the auction-purchaser whose bid is accepted on the other.

Therefore, where on account of the action of an auction-purchaser in not completing a Court-sale by depositing 25 per cent. of the purchase money a re-sale is ordered and a deficit is caused, O. XXI, r. 71 of the Civil Procedure Code empowers the Court to collect, at the instance of the judgment-debtor, the deficit that has been caused in a summary manner by way of execution.

The defaulting auction-purchaser, however, is not liable for interest on the deficit amount from the date of the sale to the date of the order of the Court directing him to re-pay.

The auction-purchaser at a Court sale is personally liable to the judgment-debtor for the deficit on a re-sale. He cannot plead that he was merely the agent of some other person at the auction.

In such cases before clause (2), of section 230 of the Contract Act can be excluded it must be alleged and proved by the party wishing to take powers—Deposit of 5 per cent. not made—Auction-sale, whether can be set aside—Auction-sale wrongly set aside by Collector—Private sale by judgment-debtor, validity of.

The powers of a Collector under Schedule III of the Civil Procedure Code terminates when the decree transferred to him for execution is satisfied and the incompetency under paragraph 11 of the Schedule to transfer the property ceases.

A failure to observe the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89, Civil Procedure Code, is not a mere irregularity and an auction-sale cannot be set aside when the full amount of 5 per cent. of the purchase-money has not been deposited. No allowance has been made by the law for any miscalculation, even though it is based on a wrong information supplied by the Court.

The proceedings for the execution of decrees by a Collector should be regarded, for the purposes of transfers of the property in his hands, as continuing till their final disposal on appeal. So long as such proceedings are liable to revision or appeal, it is open to the Collector to set aside the sale or to order the property to be sold or take such other action as he is empowered to do by the Third Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code. N BALLABHDAS v. In the absence of a direction in the mortgage-deed or in the mortgage-decree specifying the order in which the mortgaged properties are to be sold, the decree-holder is primarily entitled to sell the properties in the order he thinks best, in order to satisfy his decree. But the Court ultimately has the right to determine the order of the properties to be sold according to the equities affecting the parties.

Where an executing Court directs the sale of mortgaged properties in execution of a mortgage-decree in a certain order in disregard of the equities affecting the judgment-debtor's interest, — O. XXI, r. 90—Execution of decree—Sale—Collusive decree against judgment-debtor notified in sale proclamation—Decree set aside after sale—Suit to set aside sale on ground of fraud and collusion, maintainability of—Remedy, proper.

During the pendency of an execution proceeding when certain property belonging to the judgment-debtor was about to be sold, the latter allowed a collusive decree to be passed against him ex parte declaring a prior charge on the property. This decree was notified in the sale proclamation drawn up in the earlier execution proceedings with a rider that the decree-holder objected to the later decree as fraudulent. The notification of the later decree in the sale proclamation deterred possible bidders from coming forward to purchase the property and it was finally knocked down to the judgment-debtor's brother at a low price. The judgment-debtor subsequently applied to have the later ex parte decree set aside, which was granted and the plaintiffs in that suit allowed the suit to be dismissed. The creditors of the judgment-debtor thereupon brought a suit to set aside the auction sale in favour of the judgment-debtor's brother on the ground of fraud and collusion:

Held, (1) that there was no fraud in conducting and publishing the sale and that, therefore, the plaintiffs' proper remedy was not by way of an application under O. XXI, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that the decree in the second suit having been passed and set aside by fraud and collusion the present suit was maintainable and the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed;

— O. XXI, rr. 91, 93—Execution of decree—Sale—Auction-purchaser, right of, to refund of purchase-money—Suit to recover purchase-money, whether maintainable.

A suit by an auction-purchaser for recovery of the purchase-money paid by him from persons to whom it has been paid on the ground that the judgment-debtor did not possess a saleable interest in the property sold, is not maintainable, his right to obtain a refund of the purchase-money in such circumstances being entirely the creation of rr. 91 and 93 of O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. The only remedy of the auction-purchaser in such a case is to get the sale set aside by the method prescribed by the Code.

An auction-purchaser made an application under O. XXI, r. 91 of the Civil Procedure Code for setting aside the sale on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold. The application was dismissed in appeal and the auction-purchaser was directed to pay into Court the purchase-money which he had withdrawn under the orders of the lower Court. The auction-purchaser thereupon filed a suit for a declaration that he was not bound to re-pay the purchase-money into Court as the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold:

Held, that the suit was in effect for a refund of the purchase-money on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest in the property sold, and was, therefore, not maintainable. L HATIM MIRZA v. BHAGWANA 517

XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code, the applicant having died, and his heirs were not substituted till after the expiry of time allowed by law without any objection from the opposite party and on appeal the District Judge held that the substitution was incompetent by reason of abatement having taken place under O. XXII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, which abatement was not set aside in accordance with O. XXII, r. 9 (2), Civil Procedure Code:

Held, that the order of the District Judge was right in law but that, by reason of the application for substitution having been readily allowed and no objection having been taken at any stage of the proceeding, the order of the District Judge unjustly deprived the petitioner of an opportunity to make an application under O. XXII, r. 9 (2) and had left him altogether without any remedy. C SATISH CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE v. SRI JOGUNESSA BIBI 958

O. XXII, r. 9, applicability of—Death of one of several defendants—Abatement in toto—Application to set aside abatement, maintainability of—Appeal, whether lies.

Order XXII, rule 9 (2), of the Civil Procedure Code is confined to cases in which abatement takes place by reason of an application not having been made within time to implead the legal representatives of the deceased party, and has no application to cases in which the suit abates on account of some other cause, e. g., when the Court holds that the right to sue does not survive or that the death of one of several defendants causes an abatement in toto. In the latter case the order of the Court is a decree and as such is appealable. L THE GENERAL TRADING CO., KAHUTA v. Nihal Singh 22

O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit—Leave to bring fresh suit, whether must be given expressly.

There is nothing in r. 1 of O. XXIII of the Civil Procedure Code requiring that leave to bring a fresh suit should be given expressly. It may be given impliedly without being recorded. N SAVITRI v. MADHORAO 772

O. XXIII, r. 3—Adjustment of suit—Agreement, executory, whether adjustment.

A decree cannot be passed in accordance with an adjustment which depends upon a future contingency which may or may not happen.

An agreement between the parties to a suit that if the plaintiff eats food cooked by a particular person the whole suit may be decreed, is merely executory and does not amount to an adjustment of the suit within the meaning of O. XXIII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code. O GOURI SHANKAR v. BAKSI DUBE, 10 O. & A. L. R. 140; 11 O. L. J. 306 540

O. XXIII, r. 3—Compromise decree—Unlawful terms—Execution.

The inclusion of an invalid or illegal provision in a decree does not validate it and so far as a decree embodies unlawful terms of a compromise it is inoperative and cannot be enforced. Therefore, a consent decree directing the sale of trees which stand on agricultural land and cannot be sold apart from the land cannot be executed. N PARASHRAM v. SITARAM, 20 N. L. R. 1; (1924) A. O. XXVI, r. 4—Defendant residing beyond Court's jurisdiction, examination of—Refusal of Court to issue commission—High Court, whether can interfere—Revision.

In a suit brought in a Court at Ramnad, the defendant applied for a commission to examine himself as his own witness. It appeared that he had been residing in Rangoon with his family for many years and was served with summons there. It appeared, further, that the plaintiff himself was a resident of Rangoon and was examined on commission there. The Court having refused to issue the commission, the defendant applied to the High Court in revision:

Held, (1) that in these circumstances the defendant should have been allowed to be examined on commission,

(2) that in refusing to examine defendant on commission in the circumstances of this case the Court had acted with material irregularity and it was open to the High Court to interfere in revision. *M VISVANATHAN CHETTY v. jurisdiction will not be ousted on proof that the Court did not follow the appropriate procedure for the appointment of the guardian as laid down in rr. 3 and 4 of O. XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code.

It was proposed to appoint the fathers of certain minor defendants as their guardians ad litem and notice of this was given to the minors and their fathers. The latter did not consent to act as guardians and the Court without any further notice appointed a Pleader as guardian ad litem to the minor defendants. As the Pleader was unable to get any instructions from the minors the suit was decreed ex parte:

Held, that in the absence of prejudice to the minors it could not be held that the appointment of the Pleader as guardian ad litem was invalid for want of notice to the minors. PAT PRITAM RAM v. DHARU RAM, (1924) Pat. 216 613

The provisions of r. 7 of O. XXXII of the Civil Procedure Code apply to proceedings in execution, and the next friend or guardian of a minor cannot, without the leave of the Court, enter into any agreement or compromise on behalf of a minor, even if he happens to be the father of the minor, or the managing member of the family.

An adjustment of a decree by a Collector is voidable at the option of a minor, under r. 7 of O. XXXII if it has not been sanctioned by the Court.

Till it is avoided it is a subsisting adjustment and the decree-holder is bound to mention it in the application for execution under clause (c) of rule 11 (2) of O. XXI. An omission to mention such an adjustment vitiates the application and it is not in accordance with law.

It is not necessary that an application to the Collector for certifying an adjustment of a decree should be signed by all the decree-holders nor is it necessary that there should be any written application at all.

The Collector is invested with powers of recording the adjustment of a decree. N PERABAI v. BHAWANI PRASAD 291

— O. XXXIV, r. 4—Mortgage-decree—Sale, order of—Court, power of, to direct order of sale.

Ordinarily, the right of selling mortgaged properties in execution of a mortgage-decree in a particular order rests with the decree-holder and, in the absence of any contract between the parties, the decree-holder may proceed to sell the properties in whatever order he thinks best so as to facilitate his realisation of his mortgage-debt. But the Court can, in the particular circumstances of a case and in view of the equities arising in favour of the various parties, apart altogether from any question of marshalling, direct, under O. XXXIV, r. 4 of the Civil Procedure Code, the order in which the properties should be sold. PAT RAJ-KESHWAR PRASAD NARAIN SINGH v. MUHAMMAD KHALIL-UL-RAHMAN, 5 P. L. T. 223; 3 Pat. 522; (1924) A. — O. XXXIV, r. 14, object of.

The object of O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the Civil Procedure Code is to prevent mortgagees from suing their mortgagors on the mortgage-debt as such, and in execution selling the bare equity of redemption, thereby depriving the mortgagor of the right of redemption that would be given to him by the decree for sale. S MURAD v. DAYARAM 49

— O. XXXVII, r. 3, scope of—Leave to defend, when given—Defendant, duty of—Conditional leave.

The question to be considered on an application under O. XXXVII, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code is whether or not a triable issue is disclosed on affidavit or otherwise by the defendant. By triable issue is meant a plea which is at least plausible. It is not enough for the defendant to say that he has got a good defence but he must say what the defence is, and, as a rule, bring something before the Court to show that it is a bona fide defence and not a mere attempt to gain time by getting leave to defend.

Where there is a triable issue, leave to defend must ordinarily be given unconditionally. It is only in exceptional cases that the exception of O. XXXVII comes into operation to the extent of depriving a man of this right. In cases of this sort the Court has to find if there is any plausible defence, and where there is one, effect must be given to that fact and leave to defend should be granted, and it should be made conditional only in cases, where there appears to be so grave a suspicion that the Court comes to the conclusion that the defence is put in order to obtain further time.

When the defendant sets up some sort of defence which does not bear the stamp of truth as, for instance, when it is contradicted by documents, the Court may make the leave to put that defence conditional on the defendant being prepared to give security for the amount claimed. M PERIYA MIYANA MARAKAYAR AND SONS v. — O. XL, rr. 1, 4—"Person," meaning of—Order refusing to remove Receiver—Appeal, whether competent.

An order refusing to remove a Receiver already appointed does not come either under r. 4 or r. 1 of O. XL and is not appealable. The "person" in cl. (b) of O. XL, r. 1 refers to a person other than a Receiver. M RAMASWAMI NAIDU v. AYYALU NAIDU, 46 M. L. J. 196; 19 L. W. 247; 34 M. L. T. 6; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 614 625

— O. XLI, r. 1—Appeal, whether can be preferred without decree—Copy, application for, when to be made.

The right of appeal, therefore, does not come into play until a proper decree comes into existence.

Where a Court writes a judgment which should be followed by a decree but fails to draw up such decree, the remedy of the party who wants the decree for the purpose of appeal or execution, is to apply for it, and if it is refused, to move the High Court in revision. But until the decree has been drawn there can be neither appeal nor execution. N PANDU v. RAJESHWAR 996

— O. XLI, r. 1—Decrees, two, in one suit—Appeal, single, whether competent.

Where separate appeals preferred by two sets of defendants were accepted, and the plaintiff filed only one second appeal against the appellate decree but impleaded both sets of defendants as respondents to the appeal:

Held, that the second appeal was maintainable and that the failure to prefer two separate appeals was only a technical defect which could be overlooked, especially in view of the fact that both sets of defendants had been impleaded as respondents. A BIJAI BHADUR v. PARMESHWARI RAM 1026

The dismissal of an appeal on withdrawal has the effect of a decision on the merits. It leaves the finding of the Trial Court final against the appellant and the rule of res judicata applies.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

Rule 22 of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code allows a respondent to take a cross-objection which he could have taken by way of appeal; it does not allow him to take an objection which he has already taken by way of appeal and which has been decided against him.

The expression "cross-objections" in r. 22 of O. XLI of the Civil Procedure Code implies that the objections are taken in answer to a pending appeal. Cross-objections cannot be filed where the appeal has been withdrawn. A PARBHU DAYAL v. MURLI DHAR, 22 A. L. J. 365; 10 O. & A. L. R. 528 677

It was contended in execution proceedings that this was not a final decree and, further, that it was only a declaratory decree and as such was not capable of execution:

Held, that the decree was a final decree; that the judgment-creditor had the right to bring the property charged to sale in execution proceedings and that no separate suit for the sale of the property was necessary. S MURAD v. DAYARAM 49

Where a review is sought on the ground of discovery of fresh evidence, the fact that the evidence was discovered very late and could not, in spite of the exercise of due diligence, have been discovered earlier, may be a good ground for extending the period of limitation for applying for review under section 5 of the Limitation Act. N INDRARAJBHAI v. ----- Sch. II—Arbitration—Award not submitted within time—Fresh date fixed—Award, whether valid—Agreement to refer to arbitration, whether agreement within the meaning of O. XXXII, r. 7.

Where under a reference to arbitration made by a Court, the arbitrators do not submit their award within the time fixed by the Court and the Court fixes a date for hearing and, at the same time, issues Takid to the arbitrators, the Court's order will be taken as an order for extending the time for filing the award and the award filed before the date thus fixed shall be taken to be filed in time.

Per Page, J.—In a suit one of the parties to which is a minor represented by a guardian, if the party to the suit apply to the Court for an order of reference to arbitration the Court in hearing the application for such an order has jurisdiction to consider a petition under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code. But whether it does or does not consider such application and passes the order of refusal, its order will stand and no question can arise thereafter, as to the regularity of the proceedings preliminary to the order of reference and the arbitrators get jurisdiction to proceed with and to complete the arbitration notwithstanding the fact that a petition has not been preferred under O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code.

Per Suhrawardy, J.—An agreement to refer to arbitration is not such an agreement as is contemplated by O. XXXII, r. 7, Civil Procedure Code. But even if it is, where it is entered into without the leave of the Court and the Court overrules an objection against its invalidity, it does not commit such an irregular exercise of jurisdiction as would justify interference in revision. C DEBIR-UD-DIN v. in dispute between the parties to arbitration, the parties accepted the reference, signed their names on the order-sheet of the Court, attended the arbitration proceedings, produced certain documentary evidence and the arbitrator gave his award:

Held, that the parties were estopped from impeaching the legality of the award on the ground that the original reference was not in writing.

Where a dispute pending in appeal is referred to arbitration the arbitrator has power to decide whether he should accept additional evidence or not.

An arbitrator is a judge of all matters whether of fact or of law and a Court hearing objection against an award is not a Court of Appeal sitting in judgment over the award. O MIRZA MUHAMMAD HASAN BEG v. MIRZA SHAKIR BEG, 10 O. & A. L. R. 55; 11 O. L. J. 142 378

The mere fact that an arbitrator is an officer of the Court does not affect his power or its exercise, nor does it justify his award to be scrutinized to a greater extent than the award of an independent person.

Where no misconduct of the arbitrator is proved the award is final, and the Courts cannot set it aside except for a patent error apparent on the very face of the award as made.

An award in a suit for accounts cannot be modified by the Court on the ground that the arbitrator has awarded a larger amount than that mentioned in the plaint. S JAN MAHOMED v. MUKHI GAZI 60

A borrower is not entitled to any relief unless he proves, first, that the lender was in a position to dominate his will, and, secondly, that the bargain was unconscionable within the meaning of clause (3) of section 16 of the Contract Act. It is only the concurrence of these two elements that can justify the Court in granting relief to the borrower.

Urgent need of money on the part of the borrower does not of itself place the lender in a position to dominate his will within the meaning of section 16 of the Contract Act.

If a mortgagee, after assigning his interest in favour of his co-mortgagee, receives any payment from the mortgagor and appropriates the same, the assignee of his interest is entitled to join him as defendant and to ask relief against him in the alternative in a suit against the mortgagors and the Courts are competent to grant, in order to avoid multiplicity of suits, relief against him, if facts are found against him.

In the case of a debtor to a joint family, in the absence of any evidence to fix him with the knowledge that the joint family has been disrupted, he will be legally justified in believing in the continuance of the self same jointness or common unity of interest between the members of the representatives for the purpose of granting him discharge for payments as existed before.

A mortgage of immoveable property is excluded from the definition of actionable claim.

Section 130 of the Transfer of Property Act does not intend or purport to lay down any mode of transfer for making an assignment, much less does it declare the assignments of mortgage effective or ineffective for compliance or non-compliance with the requirements of that section. It does not also render invalid any dealing by the mortgagor, having no notice of the assignment, with the original mortgagee after the date of the assignment. All such questions arising out of assignment are left out for treatment under the general law relating to contracts, transfers, estoppel and other laws including the personal law of the parties.

The assignee of a mortgage is bound to serve a notice of the assignment on the mortgagor and in a suit by the assignee of a mortgage, the mortgagor is entitled to credit for the re-payments he may have made to the original mortgagee after the assignment but without notice of the transfer,

s. 46—Mortgage—Amount left with mortgagor to pay off creditors of mortgagor—Period within which payment must be made—Reasonable time—Failure to make payment, effect of—Mortgagee, whether entitled to possession.

Where a portion of the consideration of a mortgage is left with the mortgagee in order to pay off the mortgagor's debts, and no time is fixed for the payment of the debts, the payment must be made within a reasonable time. Where it was found that the object of the mortgagor in executing the mortgage was to consolidate his debts and to prevent interest running at a high rate and the major portion of the consideration for the mortgage was left with the mortgagee to pay off those debts:

Held, (1) that the mortgagee was bound to pay off the debts as soon as possible;

(2) that the debts not having been paid off by the mortgagee within a reasonable time he was guilty of a breach of the mortgage contract and was not entitled to possession of the mortgaged property under the terms of the mortgage-deeds;

(3) that his security was, however, good to the extent of the amount actually advanced by him.

The giving of notice is a condition precedent to the lawful exercise of the power of re-sale given by section 107 of the Contract Act and it is for the person exercising the power under the section to plead and prove that the notice was given and the condition precedent fulfilled. It is not enough to say that the purchaser has suffered no loss on account of the re-sale, inasmuch as where the Legislature enacts a general rule its operation cannot be governed by such considerations as whether looking to the reasons which led the Legislature to enact it, it is necessary to apply the rule or not in particular cases. Some of the goods delivered by the plaintiff in pursuance of the contract were purchased by R. (2) but that the defendants having accepted the goods and not having rejected them within a "reasonable time" they were entitled under section 118 of the Contract Act only to claim compensation for damages caused by the breach of warranty of title;

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (c)—Suit for cancellation of Samudayam deed and for injunction and accounts—Plaintiff not party to deed—Valuation—Suit for removal of several trustees—Removal of such trustee, whether separate relief.

A suit praying for the cancellation of a Samudayam deed to which the plaintiff is not a party is in substance a suit for a declaration that the deed is not binding on the Devaswam and if an injunction and accounts are also asked as reliefs consequential on such a declaration the suit comes under section 7, cl. iv (c) of the Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), and the recently added proviso to the section does not affect the case, inasmuch as the Samudayam deed does not create any charge on immoveable property. In such a case the plaintiff is entitled to place his own valuation on the reliefs claimed but the valuation must be the same for purposes of Court-fee and jurisdiction.

A suit for the removal of several trustees on the ground of their having executed an illegal document on behalf of the Devaswam is governed by Art. 17 (B) of Schedule II of the Court Fees Act, as amended by Madras Act X of 1922, but the removal of each trustee is not a separate relief and only one fee of Rs. 100 is leviable since the ground for removal, namely, the execution of the deed, is the same in the case of each and the

A peculiar weight must be assigned to entries relating to a custom of pre-emption made in Settlement Records of 1885, as special instructions had been issued by the Board of Revenue to Settlement Officers regarding the Record of Rights of pre-emption.

But entries relating to rights of pre-emption made in such Settlements are not conclusive proof of the custom recorded therein and are not binding on the Civil Courts.

Where a plaintiff relies upon a contract in order

— Pre-emption—Hissedar karibi, meaning of—Hindu widow, whether karibi of co-widow.

The word karibi means a relation by blood or marriage. A Hindu widow is, therefore, a karibi of her co-widow.

When custom allows a preferential right of pre-emption to a hissedar karibi over a mere hissedar, a Hindu co-widow who is also a co-sharer has a preferential right of pre-emption in respect of a sale by her co-widow as against a co-sharer who is a mere stranger. A MANNI LAL v. A right of pre-emption must, in the absence of a Statute, be based either on contract or custom.

In the absence of a statutory enactment or an entry in a public Record of Rights, the custom may be deduced from a long series of cases.

When a rule of custom is deduced from previous judgments, it should not in any way be departed from merely on the ground that it is now thought more equitable or convenient that a new rule should prevail. A AMLA NAND v. NANDU, 22 A. L. J. 126; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 318 145

— Wajib-ul-arz, entry in. Preference among co-sharers.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village provided that every co-sharer had a right to transfer his share but at the time of transferring it, it was incumbent on him to inform the nearer co-sharers and in case of their refusal the other co-sharers of the village, and in case both these sets of co-sharers refused, then he was entitled to sell it to whomsoever he liked. A later wajib-ul-arz provided that when a co-sharer wished to sell his share, a co-sharer who was a near relation, then a co-sharer who is a distant relation, then all co-sharers in the jatt; and then co-sharers in the lambar-dari and then the other co-sharers of the village would have priority and preference.

Held, that under these provisions a nearer co-sharer had a preferential right of pre-emption as against a distant co-sharer. A DIANRAJ MEHRA v. HAMDESHWAR DAS, 21 A. L. J. 9-8; 46 A. 170; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 227 904

— Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in value of—Right denied to one class of co-sharers, effect of.

Although a wajib-ul-arz raises a prima facie presumption of the existence of the custom it recites, nevertheless, if it contains certain other matters relating to that right which cannot possibly form the subject of a custom, there would be no justification for presuming that the entry is one of custom.

It is impossible to conceive of a custom of pre-emption which makes distinctions between persons who have inherited by collateral succession and persons who have inherited by direct descent. All such persons become co-sharers in the village, and have equal status and rights in the eye of the law.

An entry in a wajib-ul-arz which sets forth a custom of pre-emption but winds up by saying that the right is denied to a person who becomes a co-sharer by collateral inheritance cannot be regarded as a record of custom of pre-emption. A KARAMAT v. WAZIR HUSAIN, 46 A. 110 587

Among parties generally following Customary Law it is permissible to fall back as a last resort on their personal law for the decision of a point on which no definite rule of custom applicable can be found. The function of a Court in matters of disputed custom, is to discover the actual practice and to give effect to it.

The Riwaj-i-am, even when unsupported by instances, is an important piece of evidence in support of the custom which it records to which serious regard must be paid.

The word "mother" in a riwaj-i-am must be presumed to carry its plain literal meaning, in default of any evidence that it was intended to mean or include somebody else. A grandmother

Village sites—Proprietors, rights of—
Village becoming town, effect of—Administrative act declaring certain area to be town, effect of Presumption—Kulachi in Dera Ismail Khan District, whether town—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 110.

An administrative act including an area within the limits of a Municipality or a Notified Area does not necessarily operate to destroy the pre-existing character of that area, and such administrative act is not in itself sufficient to make the area so included a sub-division of a town; but such inclusion is strong evidence of the urban character of that area.

The fact that an area is urban immoveable property for purposes of pre-emption is not in itself conclusive proof that the village proprietary tenure of sites no longer exists in that area, but it does give rise to a presumption to that effect.

It is possible for an area in course of time completely to change its character, and what was originally a village may become a town.

Where a village has become definitely and unmistakably a town, even the most shadowy title of a ground landlord may disappear altogether, leaving in operation the ordinary presumption that possession of a site implies ownership of that site unless the contrary is proved.

That portion of Kulachi which is within the city walls has become a town. Pesh ALI KHAN v. MALIK MAIDAN 552

Will—Rajputs of Ganachaur, Tahsil Nawashahr, Jullundur District Right to challenge alienation Collaterals in 7th degree—Ancestral land—House situate in same village, character of—Defendant not in possession of land—Declaration, suit for, whether competent.

Where a devisee under a Will is not in possession of the land devised to him, the reversioners of the testator are competent to challenge the validity of the Will in the form of declaratory suit, and it is immaterial that they are not themselves in possession.

A house owned by a person in the same village in which he owns ancestral land must be regarded as an appanage to the land.

When an alienation of ancestral land is challenged by the reversioners of the alienor the burden is on the alienee to justify the alienation, even when the persons challenging it are related to the alienor in the seventh degree.

A Rajput of Guna Chaur in the Nawashahr Tahsil of the Jullundur District is not competent by custom to bequeath ancestral land in favour of a distant collateral in the presence of nearer collaterals. L. KYAR MUHAMMAD v. BANNA 183

Injury to neighbour's land—Land not capable of cultivation—Damages, whether can be awarded.

A person who for his own purposes brings on his land and collects and keeps there such a quantity of water as is likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril, and if he does so, and does not succeed in confining it to his own property, he is answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape, though the escape may not be due to any fault or negligence on his part.

There is, however, no logic in making a person liable in damages for causing an alleged injury to a thing which from its nature is incapable of sustaining such injury. For instance, a person cannot be held liable for causing damage to another by rendering his land unfit for cultivation by reason of submersion owing to the overflow of water from the former's land, where it is found that the submerged land was not capable of cultivation at all. N GOPALA v. Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 2—"Agriculturist," meaning of. The definition of an "agriculturist" in section 2 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not limited to a judgment-debtor being an agriculturist at the date of the suit or of the decree. It is comprehensive enough to include an agriculturist at any stage of the proceedings. 8 HARTOMAL v. HAZARISING 583

— ss. 3 (w), 7 and 12—Status as agriculturist not pleaded by defendant—Ex parte decree passed—Whether defendant can plead to be agriculturist in execution proceedings—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata.

Where defendant in a suit falling within clause (w) of section 3 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, does not expressly raise the plea either that he is an agriculturist or claims to be tried under the provisions of that Act, and the Court passes an ex parte decree against him without examining him and the plaintiff under sections 7 and 12 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the Courts must be deemed to have decided by necessary implication that the defendant is not an agriculturist, and it is not open to the defendant to contend in execution proceedings that he was not an agriculturist at the time of the passing of the decree. S LAWRENCE PHILLIPS & Co. v. NAZARETH 1806

Divorce cases—Damages—Assessment—Principles.

The damages in divorce cases are not punitive. The means of the co-respondent are an irrelevant consideration except in so far as they were of assistance to him in seducing the wife. It is not the intention that a man should make a profit out of the dishonour of his wife. The only question is what the petitioner has lost in his wife—whether the co-respondent can pay that loss or not is immaterial. When damages have been assessed, in the absence of an order to the contrary, they must be brought into Court and dealt with in pursuance of the Judge's order. They may be ordered to be paid out to the petitioner, but this course is the exception and not the rule. They may be settled on the wife, or on her children, or otherwise dealt with in the discretion of the Court, on now well established principles. M JAMES RALPH FREER v. H. A. JOHNSON, 46 M. L. J. 282; 19 L. W. 374; 34 M. L. T. 163; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 446 120

Easement—Prescription.

The right to bury dead bodies in land belonging to another is not an easement recognised by the law and cannot be acquired by prescription. L MANGAT RAM v. SIRAJUL HASAN, 6 L. L. J. 130; (1924) A. I. R. (L.) 492 152 — Quasi-easement, what is—Partition of joint property—Right of lateral support—Joint wall—Rights of parties.

The term "quasi-easement" is applied to those easements which, not being easements of absolute necessity, come into existence for the first time by presumed grant or operation of law on a severance of two or more tenements formerly united in the sole or joint possession, or ownership, of one or more persons.

The principle is that, on the grant by the owner of an entire property of part of that property as it is then used and enjoyed, there will pass to the grantee all those continuous and apparent easements, termed quasi-easements, which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the property granted, and which have been and are at the time of the grant in use for the benefit of the part granted.

As between co-parceners, mutual conveyances of the shares allotted to them respectively upon a partition of joint property, whether under the direction of a Court of Law or otherwise, will carry with them by presumption of law the right to such continuous easements as are necessary for the reasonable use and enjoyment of the premises respectively allotted. One of such easements is the right of support, including lateral support, which passes by implication of law to a grantee, and it is applicable to the case of a party wall which is allotted entirely to one of the co-parceners, but is subject to an easement or right in the other to have it maintained as a dividing wall between the two tenements. C BHOLA NATH DUTTA v. RADHANATH BISWAS, 51 C. 789 908

—Severance of tenements—Implied grant—Equity, justice and good conscience.

Where a person grants a portion of his property reserving a portion to himself, he grants with it all the easements and quasi-easements, which had been formerly used, over the part reserved, by the part granted and which are necessary to the reasonable enjoyment of the part granted.

The doctrine of implied grant of easements on severance of tenements is in accord with justice, equity and good conscience. L FAIZ MUHAMMAD v. LATIF 561

Easements Act (V of 1882), s. 15 Easement over land belonging to Government—Period of user—Easement, whether can be acquired against occupier.

An easement is a right which attaches to one piece of land or building over another piece of land, and a person cannot have an easement over a piece of land against one person and not against another.

When a person claims an easement over land which belongs to the Government, he must prove user of the kind mentioned in section 15 of the Easements Act for a period of at least 62 years. If he fails to establish an easement over the land, he cannot establish an easement against a person who is merely in occupation of that land, by proving user for a lesser period, viz., twenty years. A NARAIN DAS v. BEHARI KAHAR 844

—ss. 28, 33, 35—Extent of easement—Mode of enjoyment how fixed—Right to light and air—Damage, when substantial.

The mode of enjoyment of an easement must be fixed with reference to the purpose for which the right was acquired.

Easements Act—concl.

Where the easement disturbed is a right to the free passage of light passing to the openings in a house, no damage is considered substantial within the meaning of sections 33 and 35 of the Easements Act, unless it materially diminishes the value of the dominant heritage and interferes materially with the physical comfort of the plaintiff or prevents him from carrying on his accustomed business in the dominant heritage as he might have done previous to the disturbance.

Each case of an alleged disturbance of an easement of light and air must be decided on its own facts.

Where the defendant constructed his wall in such a manner as to block a window in the plaintiff's verandah which opened towards the defendant's land and the plaintiff sued for the demolition of the wall:

Held, that the obstruction of the window did not, in the circumstances of the case, involve any material interference with the access of light and air, and the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. A DURGA PRASAD v. LACHMI NARAIN, 22 A. L. J. 314; (1924) A. I. R. (A) 394 563

Where a person in possession of land knowing that he has no title to the land plants trees on the land or makes other improvements he cannot claim compensation for the improvements on ejectment. N MUNNA v. SUKLAL 987

Equity—Contract—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 65—Sale in contravention of Law—Refund—Parties in pari delicto.

The obligation to do justice rests upon all persons natural and artificial; if one obtains the money or property of others, without authority, the law will compel restitution or compensation.

Before an illegal purpose is carried out, wholly or in part, and the parties are in pari delicto, the general rule is, that no suit will lie to recover money paid under the unlawful agreement. N NARAYAN v. MOTISA, 20 N. L. R. 87 343

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 21—Admission by judgment-debtor, whether binding on auction-purchaser—Admission of prior mortgage by mortgagor in suit on subsequent mortgage, effect of.

A purchaser at an execution-sale is in privity with, and the representative-in-interest of, the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 21 of the Evidence Act, so as to be bound by his admissions. Where, therefore, in a mortgage-suit the mortgagor admits a prior mortgage, the purchaser of the property in execution of the mortgage-decree is bound by the prior mortgage. N HARBHAGAT v. ss. 21 (1), 32, 35, 79, 114 (e)—Bengal Regulation (VIII of 1799), s. 48—Bengal Regulation VII of 1793, s. 15—Return filed by Zemindar, with Collector, admissibility of—Certified copy—Presumption—Admission, value of.

A return filed by a zemindar in the Collector's Office under section 48 of Bengal Regulation VIII of 1793 and section 15 (8) of Bengal Regulation VII of 1793 does not fall within the purview of section 35 of the Evidence Act.

The presumptions contained in sections 79 and 114 (e) of the Evidence Act would, however, apply to a certified copy of such a document.

The legal effect of such a document or the weight to be attached to it would have to be determined by the application of such tests as have to be applied to all other statements. If it is sought to be used as an admission against the party making it, its probative value would be considerable. Where it is sought to be used in favour of the party who made it, it must fulfil the requirements of section 21 (1), read with section 32, of the Evidence Act, or it must be relevant otherwise than as an admission. In either case its value would be slight. C TARAK CHANDRA CHAKRABURTY v. PROSARNA KUMAR SAHA, 28 C. W. N. 679; 39 C. L. J. 389 719

s. 32 (3)—Recitals in consent decree, whether admissible—Failure to object, effect of.

The recitals in a consent decree which sets out the terms of the arrangement arrived at between the parties but does not embody the statements of the parties as to their rights in the subject-matters of the litigation, are not admissible in evidence under section 32 (3) of the Evidence Act.

An erroneous omission to object to the admission of evidence which is not admissible under the provisions of the Evidence Act, does not render it admissible. C JAGADISH CHANDRA v. HARIHAR, 40 C. L. J. 39 219

s. 32 (3)—Statement by executant of promissory note as to consideration, admissibility of.

A statement by the executant of a promissory note, who is dead, that a particular sum was due to him as the consideration for the promissory-note, is admissible in evidence under section 32 (3) of the Evidence Act to prove the real consideration for the promissory-note. A KALYAN RAI v. s. 33—Deposition of one person in one proceeding, whether admissible in evidence to contradict another person.

Under section 33 of the Evidence Act, the deposition of a witness in a former proceeding is admissible as substantive evidence in a later proceeding if certain conditions prescribed by it, are found to exist; but it cannot be used even with the consent of parties merely for the purpose of contradicting the statement of another person in such proceeding. M BOBBA BHAYAMMA v. ss. 59, 71—Attesting execution, whether includes attestation and admission of execution.

Section 69 of the Evidence Act applies only where no attesting witness can be found, but where an attesting witness is called and examined and denies execution of the document, the provisions of section 71 come into operation.

The "execution" of a deed designates the whole operation including both the signature by the executant and the attestation thereof by the subscribing witnesses. N BALIRAM v. KAMALJA 330

s. 63 (3)—Secondary evidence—Will—Copy prepared by Sub-Registrar.

A Will was submitted for registration, but as the Sub-Registrar had doubts as to its execution he referred the matter to the District Registrar. The latter required a copy of the Will to be submitted to him. The Sub-Registrar prepared a copy of the Will and submitted it to the Registrar. The Will was not registered and in a suit relating to the Will the copy of the Will submitted by the Sub-Registrar to the Registrar was sought to be proved as secondary evidence of the Will:

Held, that the copy was admissible under section 63 (3) of the Evidence Act. N BAYA v. BHABURAO 865

s. 65 (g)—Abstract from register of mutation to prove custom, admissibility of.

An abstract from mutation records showing the number of alienations of land which have taken place in a particular tribe is admissible in evidence under section 65 (g) of the Evidence Act in order to prove that members of that tribe have unrestricted powers of alienation. L SHER MUHAMMAD KHAN v. DOST MUHAMMAD KHAN 451

s. 73—Hand-writing, comparison of—Opinion formed by Judge in absence of evidence, danger of.

The practice of a Judge declaring whether a disputed signature agrees with the other signatures of a certain person without the assistance of any evidence but merely on his own inspection cannot be approved. It is especially undesirable that a Judge should take upon himself the task of comparing signatures in order to find out whether there has been a forgery in a case, where there is nothing to show on the record that

Evidence relating to dissimilarity of signatures is peculiarly fallacious, where the dissimilarity relied upon is not that of general character, but merely particular letters; for the slightest peculiarities of circumstance or position as, for instance, the writer sitting up or reclining, or the paper being placed upon a harder or softer substance, or on a place more or less inclined—nay, the materials, as pen, ink, etc., being different at different times—are amply sufficient to account for the letters being made variously at the different times by the same individual. Independently, however, of anything of this sort few individuals write so uniformly that dissimilar formations of particular letters are grounds for concluding them not to have been made by the same person. C GLASTAUN v. SONATAN PAL 668

— s. 92—Agreement reduced to writing
Oral evidence, whether admissible.

Where an agreement is not required by law to be in writing or to be registered it is not necessary to prove the agreement by the production of a written document.

Where, however, the terms of an agreement have been reduced into writing, the writing alone is the evidence of the agreement and no oral evidence can be adduced to prove the agreement. A BISUNATHI OJHA v. SAREPRAGASA OJHA 1043

— s. 92 — Mortgage-deed - Oral agreement varying rate of interest, whether can be proved—Conduct of parties, effect of.

Evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement between the parties to a mortgage-deed that compound interest should be mentioned in the deed but that simple interest only would be realised and compound interest would never be claimed, is not admissible by virtue of the provisions of section 92 of the Evidence Act. Nor would the fact that only simple interest was, as a matter of fact, realised entitle the mortgagor to a variation of the written contract. C ABDUL AZIZ MIA v. AMANMAL BATARA 742

— s. 92—Oral agreement varying terms of written contract when admissible—Agreement set off, whether can be proved.

When, at the time of a written contract being entered into, it is orally agreed between the parties that the written agreement shall not be of any force or validity until some condition precedent has been performed, oral evidence of such agreement is admissible to show that the condition has not been performed and, consequently, that the written agreement has not become binding.

But when a promissory-note expressly provides that amount due therein is payable on demand with interest at a specified rate, an oral agreement between the parties that the said amount was to be set off against the amount due to the executant of the promissory-note on some other account is not a condition precedent to the enforcement of liability under the promissory-

Where a husband stands in a position of active confidence to his wife and he manages her property the burden of proving good faith is on him.

In the case of a mortgage purporting to be executed by his pardahnashin wife it must be proved not merely that she knew what she was doing or had done, but also how her intention to act was produced, whether all that care and providence was placed around her as against those who advised her which from their situation and relation with respect to her duty were bound to exert on her behalf. O DWARKA PRASAD v. A right of appeal must always be founded upon an express rule to that effect or a rule by unavoidable implication.

The words “removing a guardian” in clause (g) of section 47 of the Guardians and Wards Act are not descriptive of the section but of the order against which appeal is provided for. Therefore, the only appeal permissible with reference to an order under section 39 of the Guardians and Wards Act is one against an order removing a guardian under that section.

Section 48 of the Guardians and Wards Act attaches finality to orders made under the Act except when they can be challenged either by way of an appeal under section 47 of the Act or by way of an application for revision under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The Hindu Law, as now understood, is the law of the Srutis and Smritis including the recognised customs as administered and interpreted in the light of judicial decisions, and this law is applicable to all persons in India who have not adopted some other personal laws of their own.

The Hindu Law applies not only to the Aryan settlers in India and such aboriginal races as have been completely absorbed in the Aryan community, but also to the descendants of the original tribes who more or less avoided complete conversion to the Brahminical religion.

The class of dancing girls and prostitutes have been recognised as a caste among the Hindus, like the four castes, either as a separate fifth caste or as included in the residuary caste of Sudras. They and their parents, the Naiks, are, therefore, governed in matters of succession by the rules laid down in the Mitakshara.

Under the Mitakshara Law an unchaste or immoral daughter is not excluded from succession. By the Caste Disabilities Removal Act the Legislature has virtually set aside the provisions of the Hindu Law which penalise the renunciation of a religion or exclusion from caste.

Therefore, a convert from Hinduism or an outcaste retains his right of inheritance under the Hindu Law whether the right accrues before or after his conversion to another religion or exclusion from caste. Where one member of a joint Hindu family is converted to Islam, there is a disruption of the entire joint family, and all the members must be deemed to be separate unless their re-union is established the onus of which lies upon the person who asserts it. It depends upon the circumstances of each case, however, what amount of evidence is required to discharge this onus. PAT RAM PARGASH SINGH v. DHAN BIR, (1924) Pat. 85; 5 P. L. The right way of judging in ordinary cases whether a loan on a mortgage of family property for purchasing an estate constitute a benefit to the family is not by looking at the ultimate result of the purchase many years after but to determine the question of benefit with reference to the time of purchase.

A debt incurred on the security of the family property is not "an antecedent debt."

Sons and grandsons not born at the date of a mortgage take by their birth an interest in the family property subject to the mortgagee's rights, in respect of the father's share as they existed at the date of the mortgage and they are not entitled to object to the alienation of such shares. N RAKHMADAI v. ----- Custom—Adoption -- Daughter's son -- Bhitwaria Brahmins of village Beri, Rohtak District.

In accordance with strict Hindu Law a man cannot adopt his daughter's son although in ancient time such adoptions were recognised.

The present view, however, more especially in the Punjab, is veering round to an acceptance of the adoption of the daughter's son although the theory exists that to qualify for adoption a man must be the son of a woman whom the adoptive father could have married.

A valid custom exists among Bhitwaria Brahmins of the Beri village of the Rohtak District allowing the adoption of a daughter's son.

In that part of the Punjab which adjoins the United Provinces the nomination of an heir on lines resembling the Krittima Hindu adoption is unknown, that is to say, even amongst people governed by agricultural custom the adoption that takes place is the full Hindu adoption by which a man is transplanted from his natural family, to his new family, and is entirely cut off from his past. L. ----- Gift—Acceptance by donee, what amounts to.

Under the Hindu Law express acceptance by the donee is necessary for the completion of a gift.

Even if it is assumed that, under the Hindu Law, acceptance of a gift by the donee may be presumed until his dissent is signified, still upon the whole case the Court must be satisfied that there was acceptance by the donee, before it can give effect to a deed of gift upon which a party to the suit may rely.

Acceptance of a deed of gift is prima facie evidence of the acceptance of the gift, but the whole conduct of the donee in connection with the acceptance must be carefully scrutinised for the purpose of determining the question whether there was in fact an acceptance of the gift.

Acceptance of a gift need not be made at once, but it must be made during the lifetime of the donor and while he is still capable of giving.

Whenever a question of acceptance is raised, there are two points which ought to be very carefully considered by the Court; first, whether the donee is in possession of the deed of gift, and, secondly, whether he is in possession of the gifted properties. Pat JAMUNA PRASAD SINGH v. SHEORATI KUER 469

----- Widow, power of, to make gift for spiritual benefit of herself.

A gift by a Hindu widow of a moderate portion of her deceased husband's estate can only be valid if it is expressly made for the spiritual welfare of the deceased. A gift, however, pious or meritorious, cannot be enforced against the reversioners unless it is proved to be made with that object, and unless that purpose is deemed by the Hindu religion to be fulfilled by the character of the gift in question.

A one-fourth share of an estate cannot be described as a "moderate" or "small" share of the estate within the meaning of the above rule. L. MUNSHI LAL v. SHIV DASI, 4 L. 336; 5 L. L. J. 496; (1924) A. I. R. (L.) 137 266

——— Jains—Widow, whether has absolute power over property inherited from husband—Custom, proof of—Judicial decisions, value of.

Jains are Hindu dissenters and when their customs are set up they must be proved like other customs varying the ordinary law, and, when so proved, effect must be given to them.

When a custom or usage, whether in regard to a tenure or a contract or a family right, is repeatedly brought to the notice of the Courts of a country, the Courts may hold that custom or usage to be introduced into the law without the necessity of proof in each individual case.

Judicial decisions recognizing the existence of a disputed custom amongst the Jains of one place are very relevant as evidence of the existence of the same custom amongst the Jains of another place.

A Jain widow has absolute power of disposal over property inherited from her husband which was his non-ancestral property. N SANO V. PURAN SINGH ——— Joint family—Alienation—Concurrence of members in charge of property—Necessity—Presumption.

The concurrence of all the adult members of a joint Hindu family in an alienation raises a presumption of legal necessity, and the presumption would apply equally where one of the members is working away from home and an alienation is effected by all the remaining members who are in charge of the property and is challenged by the former. A BHAGWAN DAS V. 649 ——— Alienation by father—After-born son, whether can challenge alienation—Suit by one of several sons—Alienation for illegal purpose—In pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis, applicability of.

A Hindu son cannot object to an alienation validly made by his father before he was born or at least conceived. This principle, however, does not apply to the case of an invalid alienation as an after-born son has a right to a share in such property on account of the property being joint family property at the date of his birth, not having been validly transferred.

Where a Hindu father mortgages property of which he is sole owner, the transaction cannot be attacked by his sons on the ground that the mortgage-debt was incurred for immoral purposes.

Where a Hindu father improperly alienates family property, any one of his sons can recover not only his share in, but the whole of the property, to be held for the benefit of the joint family.

Hindu Law—contd.

Where the owner of a property transfers it to another for an illegal purpose and such purpose is not carried into execution, neither the vendor nor his heirs can succeed in a suit to eject the vendee in possession without proving that the purpose never got beyond the stage of intention. In such a case the burden of proof lies on the plaintiff and the maxim in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis applies. N MAN SINGH V. KARAN SINGH ——— Joint family—Alienation by father—Antecedent debt—Immoral or illegal debt—Burden of proof—Alienation, whether can be enforced against alienor's share.

It is only where joint family property has passed out of the family under an alienation in lieu of an antecedent debt incurred by the father or in execution of a creditor's remedies for such debt that it lies on the sons to prove that the debt was illegal or immoral.

An alienation of joint family property by the father which is otherwise invalid cannot be enforced against the father's share in the joint family property in those Provinces in which the right of a co-sharer to dispose of his own share in joint family property is not recognised. A MUNESHAH LAL V. ——— Alienation by father—Antecedent debt—Necessity—Mortgage—Damdupat, rule of, applicability of—Interest pendente lite, whether can be allowed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34, applicability of.

A Hindu father who is manager of the joint family is competent to mortgage the family property for payment of antecedent debts or raise money for legal necessity on the security of the larger interest including the shares of his sons.

Where the rule of Damdupat recognised in Hindu Law is in force, it applies to simple money debts as also to mortgage-debts. The consequence of this is that in case of a mortgage as soon as the maximum limit of interest is reached the contractual obligation comes to an end, and this may take place before the date of suit. In such a case the rule of Damdupat intervenes and precludes the Court from allowing the uniform contractual rate of interest down to the date fixed for redemption. The matter ceases to be any longer within the realm of contract and passes into the domain of judgment as soon as the suit is instituted, and it is here that the discretion which section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code vests in Courts to decree interest pendente lite comes into play. N MOTILAL RAMLAL V. RENU ——— Alienation by father—Antecedent debt, what is—Barred debt, whether can be antecedent—Debt incurred on security of family property, whether antecedent.

Antecedent debt means merely a debt which is antecedent in fact as well as in time, that is to say, a debt truly independent of and not part of the transaction impeached.

Per Lindsay, J.—If a Hindu father in his lifetime chooses to discharge an antecedent debt by an alienation of family property although the recovery of that debt would have been impossible under the law of Limitation at the time the father discharges it, his sons must be held to be bound by the father's transaction.

Per Sulaiman, J.—When a debt becomes time-barred it ceases to be a legal debt, and though the Hindu Law does not recognise the principle of limitation, there is no ground for holding that the sons of a Hindu debtor cannot take advantage of the Statute of Limitation which makes such a debt unenforceable.

The basis of the liability of Hindu sons in respect of debts incurred by the father is threefold. That liability may either be based on the existence of a legal necessity or on the ground of the personal obligation of the sons to pay their father's debts or on the ground of the transfer being in lieu of an antecedent debt; and each of these is a distinct and separate basis. The liability on the basis of antecedency of the debt is not affected by the question whether the father who contracted the debt is dead or alive.

A debt does not cease to be an antecedent debt merely because it is secured on the family property; and a mortgage-debt can be an antecedent-debt just as much as a simple money-debt can be.

Although, therefore, a debt which has become absolutely barred by time and the liability to pay which has not been undertaken in a previous writing, cannot be deemed to be a good antecedent so as to validate a conveyance by the father in lieu of it, yet where a mortgage-debt as such has not become time-barred but only the personal remedy against the father is barred, it can still be a good antecedent-debt so as to justify an alienation in lieu of it. A GAURI SHANKER SINGH v. SHEO NANDAN MISRA, 22 A. L. J. 369; 46 A. 381. 911

Joint family—Alienation by father—
Antecedent-debt—Carelessness and extravagance, effect of.

Where a mortgagee from the manager of a joint Hindu family is reasonably satisfied after sufficient enquiry that the money he is going to advance is required for the benefit of the joint family, he is not bound to see that it is applied for the purpose for which it is advanced and is not diverted to other purposes.

Where an antecedent-debt incurred by a Hindu father is not shown to have been in any way immoral, the mere fact that it arose out of extravagance or carelessness will not make it any the less binding on the sons.

An estate is equally in need of money for its preservation, whether the need arises from a lack of proper management in the past or in spite of it. N BANSIDHAR v. PANDURANG 431

Alienation by father—Necessity, absence of—Son, whether can sue to recover property—Antecedent-debt.

The circumstances under which it is necessary for a Hindu son suing to recover family property to show that a debt incurred by the father was illegal or immoral are two; the first is, where property has passed out of the family under a conveyance executed by the father in consideration of an antecedent-debt or in order to raise money to pay off such debt, and the second is, where property has been sold in execution of a decree for the father's debt. Where, however, an alienation of family property is effected by the father for a cash consideration for which there is no family necessity, a son can recover the property without proof of the fact that the debt was an immoral or illegal one. A BALDEO v. BHAGWAN MISIR 595

Joint family—Alienation by father—
Necessity, proof of—Delay in suing, effect of—Antecedent-debt contracted on security of ancestral property, validity of.

Where a plaintiff challenges an alienation after the expiry of a long time, his conduct in instituting the suit after a long delay is an important factor in determining the nature of the transaction and in finding out whether the alienation was or was not for necessity.

Where an alienation is effected to pay off an antecedent-debt, it is not the duty of the alienee to make an enquiry into the nature and necessity thereof.

An independent debt, which is neither illegal nor immoral, contracted by a Hindu father on the security of joint family estate, is an antecedent-debt.

A Hindu father has power to alienate the joint family property for an antecedent-debt where such antecedent-debt has been contracted on the security of the family property. L DALJIT SINGH v. HARI CHAND, (1923) A. I. R. (L.) 669 11

Antecedent-debt—Alienation by father, whether binding on sons—Alienation by member to pay off father's debt—Co-parcener, whether bound.

The sons of a Hindu are bound to the extent of their interest in the joint family property by their father's action in alienating the same in order to pay off antecedent-debts incurred by himself.

A member of a joint Hindu family is justified in alienating his share in the family property in order to pay off an antecedent-debt incurred by his father, but he has no power to alienate the share of his minor brother for the same purpose. A ANANTOO-KALWAR v. RAM PRASAD TIWARI, 22 A. L. J. 182; 46 A. 295 619

Managing member, rights and duties of—Misappropriation, what constitutes—Partition—Right of residence, nature of.

Under the Hindu Law, a managing member is not bound to give a general account of his dealings and in the absence of fraud or misappropriation, he cannot be called upon to justify his past transactions. He is not bound to keep general accounts and co-parceners cannot complain if he, in his discretion, favours in his expenditure one of the co-parceners at the expense of the other.

In this matter there is no difference between the position of an infant co-parcener and another. Capital monies proved to have come into the hands of a manager must be considered as available for partition in the absence of evidence showing what has happened to them.

In this connection, misappropriation by a manager means nothing more than the expenditure by him of the money on other than justifiable family expenses.

But when assets are traced into the hands of the managing member, he is bound to account for them on partition whether the co-parceners are minors or majors. It is not enough for him to say that he has no longer got these assets.

The right of members of a joint family to residence in a particular house is not a right in rem. It is true that while it is being used as a family house, they have a right to reside there. But on partition, it is clearly a matter for the Tribunal arranging the partition to say whether it is in the general interest of the co-parceners that residence should be given in a particular house or not.

Mortgage-suit against father and sons—Compromise—Son's shares liable to sale under decree—Specification of shares—Decree-holder, right of, to sell shares of sons.

In a mortgage-suit against a Hindu father and his sons a compromise was arrived at between the plaintiff and the sons, whereby it was agreed that the father's name should be struck out and that if the sons failed to pay the decretal amount the plaintiff would be entitled to sell their shares in the property:

Held, that this amounted to an agreement on the part of the sons to put their shares at the disposal of the decree-holder and operated as a specification of their shares, and that the decree-holder was, therefore, entitled under the compromise decree, to sell the shares of the sons in the property as they stood on the date of the compromise. PAT BADRI NARAIN SINGH v. separation to prove that the separation did in fact take place. Cesser of commensality is one of the matters to be taken into consideration by the Court in arriving at a finding as to whether there has been separation or not, but it is not by any means conclusive.

Where there have been dealings between the parties themselves, that circumstances may be taken as very strong evidence in favour of the view that there has been a partition. PAT HARNARAYAN PANDE v. SURESH PANDE 472

Joint family—Partition Separation of some members, effect of—Division inter se—Two co-parceners joining in partition suit, effect of—Guardian of minor co-parceners, whether can effect severance inter se.

Where a partition takes place under a decree of Court, the effect of the decree on the remaining co-parceners must be determined by the terms of the decree or by the scope of the suit.

The mere fact that two co-parceners combine to ask for a partition does not indicate an intention on their part to become divided inter se.

A guardian of two undivided minors has no power to divide their status so as to make them lose their rights of survivorship inter se.

Where two minor brothers by their next friend sued their father for partition of their 2-3rds share in the family property and the decree gave them an undivided 2-3rds share:

Held, that the plaintiffs remained undivided inter se and on the death of one his interest survived to the other. M SENGODA GOUNDAN v. MUTHU GOUNDAN, 46 M. L. J. 401; 19 L. W. 533; (1924) M. W. N. 376; 47 M. 567 927

There is no absolute rule of Hindu Law that a partition must be equal, although, generally speaking, it is so. A member of a joint Hindu family may of his own free will accept as his share as small a portion of the joint property as seems good to him and renounce all claims to the rest.

A father in a joint Hindu family as manager fully represents the family, and, in the absence of fraud or collusion, his acts are binding on the other members of the family. It is competent

Where there is a nucleus or joint family property and purchases are thereafter made in the names of different members of the family, then, in the absence of evidence to show that the purchases are made by the members out of their separate funds, they must be treated as a joint family property.

— Suit by father to recover possession of family land, nature of—Co-parceners, whether bound by result of suit.

The question whether a Hindu father represents his co-parceners in a particular litigation is a question to be decided with reference to the circumstances of each case.

There is a great difference between the case of a Hindu father suing in respect of contracts which the Mitakshara Law empowers him as manager to make on behalf of the family and a father suing in respect of rights in immoveable property, rights which he can only hold equally with his co-parceners. At the same time, the right of the father and of the Manager to represent the joint family in the latter class of suits has been recognised traditionally in the Courts. Where the interest of a joint undivided family is in issue and one member of that family has prosecuted a suit or has defended a suit, and a decree has been made in that suit, that decree may afterwards be considered as binding upon all the members of the family, their interest being taken to have been sufficiently represented by the party in the original suit.

A suit by a Hindu father for recovery of possession of land alleged to belong to the joint family must be deemed to be a representative suit on behalf of all the co-parceners and the latter are bound by the result of the suit. PAT HUKUM MAHTO v. SANT SAHU 19

In a family governed by the Mitakshara School of Law the obligation incurred by a father which would be binding upon his sons must have two attributes, namely, first, that it must have been incurred antecedently to the transaction in suit and, secondly, it must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such a joint estate.

To establish "necessity" it is not enough to prove that a debt raised by a father on the security of the family property was used in discharging a prior mortgage by him. It must be further proved that the prior mortgage had been effected for necessity. C DAMODAR PRASHAD v. BRINDAVAN CHANDRA GHOSE 45

Under the Mitakshara a step-mother is entitled upon partition of joint family property among her sons and step-sons to get a share equal to that of a son.

Hindu Law—contd.

A Hindu widow is not an heir of her husband in the presence of his sons, and the share allotted to her on partition is not given to her as an heir but for maintenance. So that, when a co-widow dies the share held by her devolves upon the sons of her husband only and does not go to enlarge proportionately the share held by a co-widow.

Properties acquired by a member of a joint Hindu family with the assistance of joint funds are joint properties liable to be divided amongst the members of the family.

In a decree for partition of joint family property provision cannot be made in anticipation for the marriage or janeu of any of the parties. O GAYA PRASAD v. GIRJA SHANKAR, 11 O. L. J. 286 574

Where by an Act of the Legislature powers are given to any person for a public purpose from which an individual may receive injury, if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Statute, the ordinary jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted and in case of injury the party cannot proceed to action.

A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with or question the propriety of an order which has been passed by a duly constituted Tribunal and which the Legislature has declared to be final.

The Income Tax Act creates a special jurisdiction and provides a special remedy.

Where an Income Tax Officer professes to tax income and income only his order is one under the Income Tax Act, and if it is erroneous it is capable of rectification on appeal to the Commissioner. A Civil Court has no jurisdiction to question the propriety of such an order, as its jurisdiction is expressly barred under section 52 of the Income Tax Act of 1918.

It is only where an Income-Tax Officer assesses something which is not income or levies an assessment on classes of income exempted by the Act, that he over-steps the limits of his jurisdiction and his assessment ceases to be under the Act within the meaning of section 52 of the Income Tax Act of 1918. S DAYARAM RAMDAS v. Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 2, 4, 58—Super Tax—Liability to pay tax on dividends which have already paid it—Agricultural income—Income arising from markets, fisheries, moorings and ferries—Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation (I of 1793), Art. VI, effect of—Exemption from all future taxes whether granted—Exemption whether revoked by Income Tax Act.

Under section 58 of the Income Tax Act of 1922 the intention of the Legislature is to charge super-tax upon the income of Companies as well as upon the income of individual share-holders including in the income of the latter the dividends received from the Company although they had already been charged to super-tax at the flat of one anna in the rupee.

Income derived from markets, fisheries, moorings or ferries cannot be regarded as agricultural income within the meaning of section 4 (3) (viii) of the Income Tax Act of 1922, and is not as such exempt from Income Tax.

Per Dawson Miller, C. J., (Mullik, J., dissenting):—The Legislature has power to vary or modify the bargain entered into between the Government and the proprietors by the Permanent Settlement, but this can only be done by clear and specific language in a Statute and not by general implication.

Income Tax Act--1922--concl'd.

By the Permanent Settlement it was the revenue or rent payable to Government as the paramount landlord that was fixed in perpetuity, and the imposition of the Income Tax on income derived by a landlord from markets, fisheries, moorings and ferries, which had already been taken into account in fixing the permanent jama, would amount to an increase in the revenue in contravention of Art. VI of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793.

The words of section 4 (1) of the Income Tax Act of 1922 do not amount to a legal and effective abrogation of the exemption contained in Art. VI of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793.

Per Mullick, J.—No unlimited exemption from future taxation was granted by Art. VI of the Bengal Permanent Settlement Regulation of 1793. The exemption granted by the Regulation was limited to the particular objects of the Settlement, namely, use and occupation of the settled area, and the jama fixed for ever was the consideration for such use and occupation. The Crown did not in any way surrender its other rights on behalf of the general community.

If this view is not correct, the language of the Bengal Permanent Settlement is at least ambiguous and does not clearly and distinctly give any exemption from all future taxes and rates. The meaning of the Legislature being doubtful, contemporary exposition can validly be resorted to for purposes of interpretation and the uniform view of the Legislature and its servants has been that the Regulation did not intend to surrender all future rights of taxation in respect of the profits of the estates thereby affected.

If the language of the Regulation is not ambiguous and if it clearly indicates an intention to surrender all such future rights of taxation, then the language of the Income Tax Act is sufficient to revoke the exemption. *PAT MAHARAJADHIRAJ OF DARBHANGA v. Laches, doctrine of.

The doctrine of laches in Courts of Equity is not in arbitrary or a technical doctrine. Where it would be practically unjust to give a remedy either because the party has, by his conduct, done that which might fairly be regarded as equivalent to a waiver of it, or whereby his conduct and neglect is has, though perhaps not waiving that remedy, yet put the other party in a situation in which it would not be reasonable to place him if the remedy were afterwards to be asserted in either of these cases lapse of time and delay are most material. But in every case if an argument against relief which otherwise would be justified, is founded upon mere delay, that delay of course not amounting to a bar of any Statute of Limitations, the validity of that defence must be tried upon principles substantially equitable. Two circumstances always important in such cases are the length of the delay and nature of the acts done during the interval, which might affect either party and cause a balance of justice or injustice in taking the one course or the other, so far as it relates to the remedy. *M BRUNTON v. When such a claim was preferred more than three years after the date of the surrender and the Lambardar had, in the meantime, spent money on the land and leased it out to a tenant:

The compensation money payable under the Land Acquisition Act is payable under that Act and that Act only. Any rights in respect of it are creatures of the Statute and nothing else. The Statute in creating the rights has given the remedies to be exercised in respect of those rights.

Notice to quit—Statement that mesne profits would be claimed in case of delay, whether invalidates notice.

A notice of ejectment informed the tenant that he was required to vacate the premises by a certain date and that, if he failed to do so, a suit for his eviction would be filed and rent by way of mesne profits would be claimed:

Held, that the last clause meant that, if there were any delay in the tenant vacating the premises in accordance with the notice, he would be liable for damages for his continued occupation, and that the notice was not invalidated by the addition of this clause. A. Occupancy holding—Lands allotted to several villages—Rent, separate suits for, in respect of lands in each village, maintainability of.

Where lands comprised in one occupancy holding are distributed among several villages, the occupancy holding is split up into as many holdings as there are villages among which the lands are distributed and a separate suit for rent is maintainable in respect of the lands in each village. A. Occupancy tenant—Usufructuary mortgage by tenant—Landlord, whether can recover rent from mortgagee.

A landlord cannot sue the usufructuary mortgagee of an occupancy tenancy for rent of the holding, as the relationship of landlord and tenant does not subsist between the parties, the occupancy tenant being prohibited from making such a transfer of the tenancy. A. Relinquishment—Vacant possession—Possession delivered to one of several joint landlords, effect of.

A tenant giving up the demised premises to his landlord is bound to give him vacant possession, and this obligation is implied in every case as one of the terms of the letting.

Where, however, there are more landlords than one and a partition has not been effected between them, possession delivered by the tenant to one landlord would be tantamount to delivery of possession to all. L. FIRM RAMGOPAL BHAGWAN DAS v.

Rent, additional, in respect of fruit trees, legality of—Abwab—Custom.

Abwabs have been abolished under the Regulations for many years but the right to Bankar, Jhalakar and Phulkar was always an exception from the abolitions made by the Regulations and rent in respect of fruit trees or other classes of trees may well be charged in addition to the ordinary rent either under an agreement between the landlord and tenant, or if any custom to that effect can be made out.

A custom whereby the landlord is entitled to charge a certain rate of rent in respect of fruit trees in addition to the ordinary rent payable for the land is not illegal. PAT RAMESHWAR SINGH v. WAZUL HAQUE 463

Rent, suit for, questions of title whether relevant.

There is no rule of law that in a rent-suit questions of title which require to be determined should not be determined, although generally questions of title between the plaintiff and third persons are not strictly relevant in a rent-suit.

In a rent-suit the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisting between the parties and the question of the plaintiff's or anybody else's title are distinct questions. C CHITPORE GOLABARI CO., LTD. v. GIRDHARI LAL SEROGI, 353

Site occupied by tenant—Abandonment—Resumption—Grantee, whether can sue original licensor for possession—Sale of proprietary rights, effect of—Site of dwelling house, rights in.

Where a zemindar resumes possession of a site abandoned by a former licensee and grants it to another, the latter, if disturbed in his enjoyment by the former, can maintain a suit for recovery of possession against him.

Where a zemindar has resumed possession of a site abandoned by a licensee the latter cannot resume possession of the site without the permission of the zemindar.

On an auction-sale of the proprietary rights of a proprietor in a village the entire land appertaining to the property sold passes to the auction-purchaser, and by operation of law the judgment-debtor becomes a ryot and the rights of the judgment-debtor in respect of the site occupied by his dwelling house are reduced to those of other persons residing in the village. A ZAHUR HASAN v. Land tenures—Ubari tenure, incidents of—Impartibility—Presumption—Burden of proof.

The Ubari tenure has nothing to do with the proprietorship in the lands, but is merely the right to hold the village on payment of a quit-rent to Government, that is, on payment of less revenue than that ordinarily payable.

The ordinary presumption is that a village is partible and alienable, and the burden is on the person who sets up impartibility, which must be strictly proved. N ABDUL HUSAIN v. MEGHRAJ, 7 N. L. J. 110 780

Lease—Zarpeshgi lease, object of—Redemption, whether can be prevented—Apparent transaction, presumption attaching to.

The primary object of a Zarpeshgi lease is not to create the relationship of landlord and tenant but to provide a security as between debtor and creditor.

Where, therefore, a lease is executed not merely as a contract for the cultivation of land but constitutes a real and valid security to the tenant for the principal sums advanced together with interest thereon, the tenant's possession is that of creditors operating re-payment of the debt due to them by means of their security.

Equity will not permit any device or contrivance to prevent or impede redemption.

An apparent transaction must be assumed to be the real transaction until the contrary is proved. PAT KHARAG NARAIN v. DWARKA PRASAD SINGH, 3 Pat. 465 588

— s. 5—Appeal, delay in filing—Review, time spent in, whether can be deducted.

Time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment can be deducted under section 5 of the Limitation Act, from the period of limitation provided for an appeal. The mere fact that the applicant for review made a mistake of law in applying for review does not preclude him from obtaining the benefit of the section. A PARBHU DAYAL v. MURLI DHAR, 22 A. L. — s. 5—Wrong legal advice, whether sufficient ground for extension—Discretion in allowing time-barred appeals, when to be exercised.

A wrong legal advice about the period of limitation is not a sufficient ground for extension of period under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

When the time for appealing is once passed, a very valuable right is secured to the successful litigant and the Court must, therefore, be fully satisfied of the justice of the grounds on which it is sought to obtain an extension of time for attacking the decree and thus perhaps depriving the successful litigant of the advantages which he has obtained. N PADAMRAJ PHULCHAND v. MITSUKE BHUSHAN KESHA, LTD. 154 — ss. 5, 12—Application for leave to appeal to Privy Council—Time spent in obtaining copy of judgment, whether extended—"Sufficient cause," interpretation of—Time, when can be extended.

The time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment can be extended in addition to the time for obtaining a copy of the decree only in cases where the decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed. In an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, it is only the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree that can be excluded in computing the period of limitation.

The words "sufficient cause" in section 5 of the Limitation Act must no doubt receive a liberal construction, but when once the time for appeal has passed, a valuable right is secured to a successful litigant of which he must not be deprived unless the Court is satisfied that justice requires that extension of time should be granted and it must further be shown that there has been no inaction or negligence on the part of the petitioner. S NUR MAHOMED v. Where the law creates a limitation and a party is disabled to conform to that limitation without any default in him, and he has no remedy over it, the law will ordinarily excuse him.

There can be no legal obligation on a litigant to apply for a copy of a decree which is non-existent; the existence of a decree is a necessary condition precedent to the accrual of even the right or obligation to apply for a copy. Where a decree is not drawn up within the period of limitation prescribed for preferring an appeal against the decree, the suit must be deemed to be pending up to the date on which the decree is actually drawn up, and limitation for preferring the appeal will commence to run only from that date. N PANDU v. Where one of two joint execution-creditors is a minor, the other execution-creditor who is sui juris is not competent to grant a valid discharge so as to bind the interest of the minor within the meaning of section 7 of the Limitation Act.

Under the Muhammadan Law the uncle is neither the legal nor the natural guardian of the property of his minor nephew, and where he obtains a decree jointly with his nephew he is not competent to grant a valid discharge of the decree within the meaning of section 7 of the Limitation Act, and limitation for execution of such a decree does not, therefore, begin to run till the disability of the minor decree-holder ceases. L MUHAMMAD ZULFIKAR ALI KHAN v. s. 15, Sch. I, Arts. 181, 182 (5)—Execution of decree—Injunction restraining execution—Step-in-aid of execution Limitation.

Execution of a mortgage-decree for sale of a house was first taken out on 7th July 1917. On 12th September 1917 an injunction was issued restraining the sale of half the house. An application to take a step-in-aid of execution with respect to the other half of the house was made on 19th November 1917 and that half of the house was sold. The injunction was dissolved on 8th November 1918. An application for execution with respect to the other half was made on 10th January 1922;

Held, (1) that the last application to take a step-in-aid of execution having been made on 19th November 1917, limitation began to run from that date;

(2) that the only period which the decree-holder was entitled to exclude on account of the injunction was from 19th November 1917, the date on which limitation began to run, to 8th November 1918, the date on which the injunction was dissolved;

(3) that, therefore, the present application made on 10th January 1922 having been made more than three years after the date of the last application, after deducting the period during which the injunction was in force after the date of the last application, was barred by limitation. PAT LAL PAST v. A statement in a pleading that there was a mortgage but that a sale had been effected to pay off the mortgage and that since the date of the sale the vendee had been in possession of the property, does not imply a promise to pay and does not amount to an acknowledgment within the meaning of section 19 of the Limitation Act. PAT CHHATERDHARI MAHTO v. ss. 19, 20—Mortgage—Redemption suit—Acknowledgment after expiry of period of limitation—Payment of mulikana by mortgagee—Extension of limitation—Admission—Estoppel.

In a suit for redemption it is for the plaintiff to prove that he has a subsisting right of redemption at the date of suit, and he is not relieved of the burden by showing that the fact of the mortgage was admitted by the defendant at a date when more than sixty years after the mortgage was effected had expired. The admission does not operate as an estoppel and having been made after the expiry of the period of limitation for a suit for redemption cannot serve as a valid acknowledgment under section 19 of the Limitation Act.

An acknowledgment, in order to be operative under section 19 of the Limitation Act, must be signed by the party against whom any particular right is claimed.

Section 20 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases where the suit is for the recovery of a debt or legacy, and does not operate to enlarge the period allowed by law to a mortgagor to redeem his property. L. PIROZE KHAN v. KANHAIYA RAM, 6 L. L. J. 191; (1924) A. I. R. (L.) 484 617

Article 14 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to acts and orders done in the exercise of powers legally exercisable by the Executive, and can only be applied where the order is one which needs to be set aside. If in fact there is no provision of law for setting it aside, the Article cannot apply.

Though an order in a mutation case directing mutation in the name of a particular person cannot be directly impugned in a civil suit, yet another person can show by a civil suit that he is the real owner of the property mutated, and, having established his claim in that suit can then go to the Revenue Authorities and ask that mutation be made in his name. Where a plaintiff sues for possession on an allegation of dispossession, he must prove possession within twelve years before suit. In order to prove such possession he may rely upon the presumption that possession of the lawful owner continues as long as the land is incapable of actual possession, but if he relies upon this presumption he must prove that the land was incapable of actual possession within twelve years before suit. For instance, constructive possession may be shown by the fact that the land being under water was incapable of actual possession, or that, although it was capable of being possessed, no one had actually taken possession during the period in question. He cannot, however, by proving possession at any period anterior to twelve years before suit, shift the onus on to the defendant to prove his possession.

Per Page, J.—A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession: constructively it continues until he is dispossessed; and upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructive it remains.

While the doctrine of constructive possession is equally applicable to cases where the plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of land in the possession of another and to cases where the plaintiff claims to recover possession of lands of which he alleges that he has been dispossessed, a plaintiff who frames his suit to recover possession of lands of which he has been dispossessed must needs prove that he has been in possession and that he has been dispossessed within twelve years prior to commencing proceedings to recover possession of the land. C SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJI v. But a transferee or assignee from a co-sharer does not by the mere fact of transfer or assignment become a co-sharer if his rights as such are denied by the other co-sharers. Held, by the majority (Ross, J., dissenting):—An application for restitution under section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is not an application for execution, and the proper Article of the Limitation Act applicable to such an application is Art. 181 of the First Schedule of the Act.

Per Das, J.—Article 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act applies to such applications for execution as are contemplated by the Code of Civil Procedure and are provided in O. XXI of the Code. An application for restitution is not such an application. The jurisdiction to order restitution is inherent in the Court and flows not from any power which it may have to carry into effect the decree or order of the Court, but from the recognition of the duty which it owes to the suitors to take care that no injury is done to them by its acts. The Code of Civil Procedure and the Limitation Act are the two great Procedure Codes in India. They are Statutes in pari materia and are to be taken together as forming one system and as interpreting and enforcing each other.

The Patna High Court should not without very good reason, depart from a long course of decisions of the Calcutta High Court, especially on points of procedure.

Per Ross, J.—An application for restitution under section 144 or 151 of the Civil Procedure Code is an application for execution and is governed by Art. 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. PAT BALMAKUNDA MARWARI v. BASANTA KUMARI DASSI, (1924) Pat. 33; 5 P. L. T. 145; 3 Pat. 371 200

Where an application for execution is struck off without any default on the part of the decree-holder, a subsequent application for execution must be treated as a continuation of the previous application and no question of limitation can arise.

Where a preliminary decree in a mortgage-suit is passed by His Majesty in Council and a final decree is thereafter passed by the Courts in India, the decree to be executed is the order of His Majesty in Council and the execution of it is governed by Art. 183 and not by Art. 182 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. PAT BHAGWANTA KOER v. Held, that the Inam formed part of an "Estate" within the meaning of section 3 clause (2) (e) of the Estates Land Act, even if the Inam land had been exchanged for lands held under Government pattas.

A pre-settlement grant would not form part of a Zemindari unless it can be brought under any of the sub-clauses of section 3, clause (2) of the Estates Land Act.

Where, at the time of the Permanent Settlement, lands which the Government might have excluded from assessment by reason of the various grounds set forth in clause 1 of the Regulation were, as a matter of fact, included in calculating the assessment payable by the Zemindar, and where both the Government and the Zemindar from 1802 have acted on the footing that the Inam forms part of the Zemindari, the tenants who were subsequently introduced into the property have no right to question the acts of the person entitled at the time of the sanad to enter into those arrangements.

Sections 16 and 144 of the Madras Local Boards Act read together give power to the Government to make rules when an election is contested and also to frame rules declaring the qualifications required of a person before he is validly elected and the rules framed by the Government are not ultra vires.

The Local Boards under the Madras Local Boards Act are creations of Statute and the Statute having given power to the Government to frame rules for the purpose of working the Act, it is open to the Government to create a forum for the purpose of deciding disputes as to elections directed to be carried out under the provisions of the Act and rules which take away the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts are valid and ultra vires.

Madras Local Boards Act, 1884—conold.

If power is given to the Government by the Act to make rules, the fact that the Government purports to make rules under one section rather than another is not a ground for holding that the rules are ultra vires.

An order of the Government setting aside the election of a candidate as a member of a Taluk Board under the Madras Local Boards Act of 1884 and ordering a fresh election on the ground that his presence on the Taluk Board as a member is likely to bring the Local Fund Administration into contempt is not invalid on the ground that no inquiry was held and no notice was given or opportunity provided to the person effected to show cause against the allegation. M KONA THIMMA REDDY v. Judge holding election inquiry whether "persona designata" or "Court"—Civil Procedure Code Act (V of 1908), s. 115—"Finality"—Appeal—Revision—Validity of nominations to membership of Board—Jurisdiction of District or Subordinate Judge to go into—Grounds other than prescribed disqualification—Election of member as President—Right to question validity of his nomination as member in inquiry regarding election as President—Election if can be set aside—S. 23 (2) and s. 25—Short absence of President—Right to make appointments to Local Board—Validity.

A District or Subordinate Judge holding an election inquiry and acting under the powers conferred upon him by the rules framed under the Madras Local Boards Act of 1920 is acting as a 'Court' and not merely as a persona designata.

The fact that the decision of the Judge is 'final' under section 57 of the Act and the rules thereunder means that there is no appeal against it. It does not preclude revision to the High Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

There is nothing either in the sections of, or in the rules under the Madras Local Boards Act giving powers to a District or Subordinate Judge to question the validity of the appointment of a nominated member except under section 57 and on the sole ground of disqualification specified in sections 55 and 56.

Therefore, on a petition dealing with the election of a President of a Local Board, it is not competent to the Judge to go into the question whether a particular candidate was duly appointed a member of the Board.

A District Judge acts wholly without jurisdiction in investigating such a question and his decision upon it is liable to be revised by the High Court under section 115 (a) of the Civil Procedure Code.

Per Schwabe, C. J.—The proper method of questioning the appointment of a member would be by proceedings in the nature of quo warranto.

Obiter:—By reason of sections 23 (2) and 25 of the Madras Local Boards Act the mere absence for a few days of the President of a District Board from his jurisdiction does not necessarily vest in the —Foreclosure and redemption, rights of, whether co-extensive.

The ordinary presumption that the rights of redemption and foreclosure are co-extensive may be negatived by a special provision in the mortgage-deed in the interests of the mortgagor. For instance, when the deed provides that the mortgagor may redeem within a certain period, it implies that the mortgagee has no right to foreclose before the expiry of that period. In such a case limitation will not begin to run against the mortgagee till after the expiry of the period fixed in the deed. N HARBHAGAT v. NARAYANANRAO 338

—Interest at rate of one per cent. per mensem, whether penal—Post diem interest when allowed—Surety, liabilities of—Liability, how far extends—Failure of creditor to sue, whether discharges surety—Preliminary decree, effect of.

Interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem on a mortgage-security is not penal and may be allowed.

Where a mortgage-deed does not expressly provide for payment of post diem interest but its provisions, taken as a whole, without exclusive attention to any one of them stipulate that interest is to run without any limitation as to the period of its currency, post diem interest ought not to be refused.

In the absence of anything to show that his liability was otherwise limited, surety for payment of interest is liable to pay the same until the debt is naturally satisfied and not only for the time mentioned in a deed for payment of the principal amount.

The fact that post diem interest is recoverable from a mortgagor under the terms of the mortgage-deed and not by way of damages does not necessarily make the liability of the surety to pay interest co-extensive with that of the mortgagors.

The surety must never be charged beyond the precise terms of his engagement.

The mere forbearance on the part of the plaintiff to sue does not discharge the surety of his liability.

A preliminary decree operates as merger with regard to the liability to pay future interest and releases a surety from his liability under the deed. S TULSIDAS KESHOWDAS v. HASHIM 868

—of khewat land—Shamilat acquired subsequent to date of mortgage—Extinguishment of right of redemption—Shamilat, whether transferred to mortgagee.

Plaintiffs executed a mortgage of certain khewat lands in favour of defendants prior to 1856. In the latter year a large area of Government waste land was entered in the Revenue Records as shamilat of the village. In 1881 plaintiffs sued to redeem their mortgage, but their suit was dismissed as time barred. In 1905, the shamilat was partitioned and plaintiffs' share was entered in the name of the defendants who had become owners of the khewat land which had been mortgaged to them. Plaintiffs brought the present suit for possession of the shamilat land.

Held, (1) that it must be assumed that Government made a present of the waste in 1856 to the proprietary body of the village and that the plaintiffs, who were at that time members of that body, became rightful owners of a share in it in proportion to their khewat holding;

(2) that the mere fact that they had subsequently lost their khewat land did not operate to transfer their rights in the shamilat to the defendants. L SHAHADAT v. GANESH DAS 368

— Mortgagor, whether can sue to recover unpaid balance of mortgage-money—Implied contract.

An implied contract gives a cause of action no less than an express contract. There is an implied contract in the case of a mortgage that the mortgagee is to pay the whole of the amount for which the land is mortgaged.

A suit is, therefore, maintainable by the mortgagor to recover the unpaid balance of the mortgage-money from the mortgagee. L IMAM DIN v. DIRU 445 — Occupancy tenancy, joint—Mortgage by sons co-tenants—Co-tenant, whether can repudiate entire mortgage.

A mortgagor is estopped from denying the validity of the mortgage after having received the consideration thereof from the mortgagee.

Similarly, a joint occupancy tenant who desires to repudiate a mortgage of the tenancy made by his co-tenants, can get back possession of his own share in the tenancy, but he cannot repudiate the entire mortgage made by his co-tenants and get back possession of their shares, without paying to the mortgagee the money realised from him by his co-tenants. A SHAIKH MUJI v. — Redemption—Mortgagee failing to deliver possession of entire mortgaged property—Mesne profits, liability to pay.

On redemption a mortgagee is bound to hand over to the mortgagor the property of which he got possession in the capacity of mortgagee and in no other capacity. If he claims to have become a co-sharer in the property during the pendency of the mortgage, the proper procedure is for him to hand over to the mortgagor the whole quantity of the lands of which he obtained possession as mortgagee and then to settle with the mortgagor as to which portion should be handed back to him as representing his share.

If the mortgagee fails to deliver possession of the lands of which he obtained possession in the capacity of mortgagee he will be liable to pay mesne profits to the mortgagor. A DILDAR v. SHUKRULLAH, 46 A. 152; (1921) A. I. R. (A.) 444 1023

— Redemption, suit for—Mudfi land assessed to revenue—Revenue paid by mortgagee, whether can be added to mortgage-money interest, mortgagee whether entitled to.

Where in the case of a mortgage of mudfi land, the land is assessed to revenue during the continuance of the mortgage, and the mortgagee is compelled to pay the revenue, he is entitled to add the amount so paid to the mortgage-money and claim it from the mortgagor at the time of redemption. He is not, however, entitled to claim interest on the amount unless the terms of the mortgage give him that right. L RAJA RAM v. GAHI 1033

— Suit—Execution—Recitals, on whom binding—Mortgage executed by widow—Adoption after mortgage, whether binding on adopted son.

In an action to enforce a mortgage security where there is no contest by the mortgagor and execution is admitted by or proved against him, the onus lies upon him to prove that the recital as to payment of consideration for the deed which he executed is untrue. Where, however, a stranger to the transaction is a party, and the claim is contested by him and he denies execution and also asserts that there was no consideration for the mortgage, the onus is upon the mortgagee to prove his case.

In case the attesting witnesses are either hostile or not available and the writer of the bond is dead the mortgagee should give independent evidence to identify the handwriting of the person who purported to put the mark or to write the name of the executant and also that of the witness who purported to attest the deed but whose direct evidence is not procurable.

A recital in a deed binds only the maker, i.e., the party to the instrument, and not persons who are not parties thereto, although they may have derived their title from such maker. A person who is not a party to a transaction is in the category of a stranger, and as such can set up an inconsistent claim or defence whether he be a plaintiff or defendant.

Although a person adopted by a Hindu widow gets the title to her husband's estate by virtue of his adoption by her, yet he does not derive his title through her, and, therefore, cannot be looked upon as a party to a deed of mortgage executed by her before his adoption. N BALIRAM v. KAMALJA 330

Muhammadan Law Joint family property—Presumption—Commensality—Partition amongst Muhammadans—Property acquired by one member—Jointness—Burden of proof.

There is no such thing as joint family property under Muhammadan Law and the presumption of Hindu Law that money spent by a member of the family came from the joint fund is not applicable to Muhammadans.

Amongst Muhammadans mere commensality is insufficient to prove jointness in estate.

In a partition-suit amongst Muhammadans the burden of proof that property acquired by one member only was purchased out of the joint fund, is on the members who allege it. S YUSUF MAHOMED v. ARUBACKER IBRAHIM 817

Custom—Marwari Silawata community—Succession—Exclusion of females from inheritance—Evidence—Instances—Opinion—Burden of proof. Essentials of valid custom.

There is no custom amongst members of the Marwari Silawata community by which, in derogation of the rules of Muhammadan Law, females are excluded from inheritance.

To establish the exclusion of females from inheritance it is of vital importance to prove that some of the females asserted their rights as heirs and that their rights were denied. Mere passive acceptance of their position by females in cases where their male relations accord to them all that is necessary for their daily sustenance and their refraining from actively asserting their rights to any share in property is not enough to prove that they are excluded from inheritance.

Where females are dependent upon their male relations and subservient to their control, to establish their exclusion from inheritance, it must be satisfactorily proved that they were aware that they were excluded by reason of a custom having the force of law.

The party relying on a custom which is to have the effect of overriding the ordinary law, must prove it by clear unambiguous evidence.

A custom to be valid must be (1) immemorial, (2) reasonable, (3) continued without interruption, (4) certain.

In questions of custom evidence merely of the opinion of leading members of caste is not enough, instances must be proved in which the alleged custom has been established and proved. When the oral evidence emanates from a class of highly interested witnesses, it is of infinitesimally small value.

Per Kennedy, J. C.—Numerous instances of non-taking of inheritance by women would not be sufficient to establish the custom of their exclusion from inheritance unless it were shown that the women wished to take their share of inheritance and were refused on the ground of the custom and unless it were also shown that there were no instances to the contrary. S USMAN v. Where a deed gift is executed by a person governed by the Muhammadan Law, and possession of the property comprised in the deed is not delivered to the donee, the gift is void ab initio, and in such a case, no question of limitation for a suit to impeach the gift can arise. The right of the donor to impeach such a gift can only accrue from the moment when by receipt of possession by the donee the gift can become operative by law.

Under the Hanafi Law a gift cannot be revoked after the subject of the gift has increased in value owing to some accession thereto made by the donee which is inseparable from it. A MULANI v. MAULA BUX, 22 A. L. J. 149; 46 A. 260; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 370 222

When there is no evidence that the wakif on the day he executed the wakfnama was under an apprehension of immediate death, the mere fact that he was suffering from phthisis or that he died a few days after the execution of the deed, is not enough to establish what in Muhammadan Law is technically called marz-ul-maut. In fact lingering diseases like phthisis remove the suspicion of apprehension of immediate death on the mind of the patient.

If a mutwalli does not act according to the trust imposed upon him by the wakf deed, that could not effect the character of the endowment. It cannot be said that a wakf is not good because it has not been acted upon. C REZA ALI v. KAZI NUR-UD-DIN AHMED 174

Held, that the document did not contain any unconditional undertaking to pay the principal sum of money and the only undertaking given was to pay interest at the rate of ten annas per cent. coupled with an acknowledgment of the debt; it was not, therefore, a promissory-note within the meaning of section 4 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. L NANAK CHAND-KISHORI LAL v. Nuisance—concl'd.

The nature of the interference has to be examined in each case in the light of the circumstances of the place, where the thing complained of actually occurs, and the degree of inconvenience caused must determine the nature of the relief to which the person complaining may be entitled.

Whether anything is a nuisance or not is a question to be determined not merely by an abstract consideration of the thing itself but with reference to its circumstances; and where a locality is used for the purpose of carrying on a trade or manufacture, the fact that such trade or manufacture does exist elsewhere, not far from the place, cannot be left out of account. A BEHARI LAL v. A time-barred debt can form a valid consideration for a transfer of property. If a husband is willing to pay a certain amount of the dower-debt due to his wife and has as a matter of fact paid it by a transfer of property, a Court cannot interfere with the arrangement on the ground that if the husband had resisted the claim for dower under section 5 of the Oudh Laws Act, the amount decreed to the wife would have been less than the value of the property transferred by the husband in lieu of dower. O ZOHRA BIBI v. Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 32 (A), 32 (B), 127—Suit to recover arrears of rent—Alternative claim for use and occupation—Duty of Court.

Plaintiff sued to recover arrears of rent from the defendant and based his claim on a kabuliyat alleged to have been executed by the defendant. In addition to the kabuliyat he sought to prove that the defendant had been paying rent to him as a tenant. His suit was dismissed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that he had failed to prove the kabuliyat.

Held, that the Court was bound to adjudicate on the alternative claim of the plaintiff that the defendant was in occupation of the land as plaintiff's tenant apart from the kabuliyat and had been paying rent to him. O RAJA MUHAMMAD MAHDI ALI KHAN v. TAWAKKUL KHAN 764

When a Revenue Court, dealing with a proceeding for the enhancement of rent under section 108 (5) of the Oudh Rent Act, makes a declaration under section 107H of the Act that the tenants are under-proprietors in relation to the land in dispute, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the zemindar for a declaration that the persons declared to be under-proprietors by the Revenue Court are not under-proprietors. A Court of Appeal is not justified in exposing a party after he has obtained his decree to the brunt of a new attack of which he had no notice during the hearing of the suit.

Ordinarily, every plaintiff has got a right to say that the rights of the parties should be adjudicated upon as they existed at the date of the suit, and that the Court should not take notice of any events that have happened during the pendency of the suit. This, however, is not an invariable rule and a Court will, in exceptional cases, depart from it, especially when by so doing it can shorten a litigation and best attain the ends of justice by preserving the rights of both parties. It is not only in the power but it sometimes is the duty, of even a Court of Appeal to take notice of events which have happened during the pendency of appeal, and such events not appearing on the record can be allowed to be proved by extrinsic evidence. N ANANT RAM v. A right of pre-emption is not a mere right of re-purchase, either from the vendor or from the vendee involving a new contract of sale, but it is simply a right of substitution. It is, in effect, as if in a sale-deed the vendee's name were rubbed out and the pre-emptor's name inserted in its place. O COLLECTOR SINGH v. MADARI LAL 738

Under section 37 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, the onus is upon the Official Receiver to show that the intention of the insolvent was to prefer one creditor to others and there must be some evidence of intention to prefer other than the mere fact that he was insolvent.

If money is raised by an insolvent by pledging property for the purpose of paying creditors, whatever may be the view of the mortgagor in paying the creditors, if the mortgagee acts bona fide, the transaction would be valid against the Official Receiver.

By virtue of section 16 (6) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, the property of the insolvent by reason of the principle of relation back, on the date the insolvency petition is presented, becomes the property of the Official Receiver, and a payment made by a debtor of the insolvent to his creditors after that date would not relieve him from liability to pay the amount to the Official Receiver. M JANAKI RAM VILAS NIDHI LD. v. s. 68—Official Receiver disallowing creditor's claim—Proceedings instituted by creditor against order—Official Receiver, whether necessary party—District Court, whether bound to take fresh evidence.

The Official Receiver is an officer of Court and there is no provision in the Insolvency Act which makes it obligatory on the District Court to have the Official Receiver made a formal party to proceedings under the Act, and the fact that he is not impleaded does not vitiate any order passed therein.

There is no provision in the Insolvency Act laying down any obligation on the District Court to take fresh evidence in matters brought before it although it would be open to the Court to take such evidence if it thinks desirable to do so.

In certain insolvency proceedings the Official Receiver allows the claim of a creditor only in part. The creditor applied to the District Judge praying that the whole of his claim be allowed. The District Judge granted the prayers and another creditor appealed to the High Court against the order:

Held, (1) that inasmuch as the creditors were made parties and notice had been given to all of them, it was open to them to appear themselves before the District Court or to have moved the Official Receiver to represent the whole party of creditors before the Court and to state their objections and the proof tendered and that, therefore, it was not necessary to make the Official Receiver a formal party to the proceedings;

Invalid sale, application for setting aside—Limitation.

The Official Receiver does not get a right to deal with the properties of the insolvent without an express vesting order.

Section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act presupposes that the decision is by a Receiver properly appointed and does not apply where the sale is invalid as being made by a person who was not authorised to sell.

An insolvency petition having been filed in the District Court, the District Judge made an endorsement on it that it was "transferred for disposal to the Official Receiver." No further orders were made by the Court in the case. After the adjudication of the insolvent the Official Receiver sold two properties belonging to the insolvent and two creditors, therefore, applied to the District Judge to get the two sales set aside. The District Judge dismissed their application on the ground that they were out of time having been filed more than 21 days from the date of the two sales. The creditors appealed to the High Court;

Held, that the order of the District Judge could not be taken to include a vesting order made in anticipation of the adjudication of the insolvent and the Receiver had, therefore, no power to deal with the properties;

(2) that the sales being invalid, section 68 of the Provincial Insolvency Act did not apply and the rules were liable to be set aside. M SANKARA RAO v. RAMAKRISHNAYYA, 46 M. L. J. 184; (1924) M. W. N. 198; 34 M. L. T. 2; 19 L. W. 450; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 461 294

Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918) s. 41 (3)—Appeal, second—Remand, findings on—Finding of fact, whether can be questioned—Finding on question of custom—Certificate whether necessary.

All that is laid down in section 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act is that no appeal shall lie to the High Court regarding the validity or existence of any custom without a certificate by the Judge of the lower Appellate Court. There is no provision that when once an appeal has been properly filed, a certificate should be required at any subsequent stage of the hearing.

The provision as to a certificate is only intended to apply as a condition precedent to the filing of an appeal and not as a condition precedent to the challenging of a finding on a question of custom remanded to the lower Appellate Court. Once a second appeal has been legally instituted the appellant can contest at the hearing any findings of the lower Appellate Court which are against him, so long as he has taken exception to them in his ground of appeal.

When, therefore, an issue on a question of custom is remanded in second appeal under O. XLI, r. 25 of the Civil Procedure Code, the finding on that issue recorded by the lower Appellate Court can be questioned before the High Court without a certificate. L. RAM MEHR v. Punjab Pre-emption Act (I of 1913), s. 3 (1)—Agricultural land, what is—Land not used for agricultural purposes for several years.

The question whether, on the facts found, the property in dispute is to be classed as agricultural land or as village immoveable property within the meaning of section 3 (1) and (3) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act is a question of law.

The test for determining whether a piece of land is or is not agricultural land is the use to which the land is put at the time of sale, and each case must be decided on its own facts.

It is not a necessary implication that land is not agricultural land merely because at the time of sale it bears no crop. Agricultural land often lies fallow in the ordinary course of agriculture, and often remains unsown by reason of paucity or excess of moisture.

Land which has not been used as agricultural land for a period of six years and has been proposed for sale as a building site cannot be regarded as agricultural land within the meaning of section 3 (1) of the Punjab Pre-emption Act. L. GOPI MAL v. MUHAMMAD YASIN 443

s. 22 (4)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 148—Pre-emption suit—Failure to deposit one-fifth of purchase-money—Extension of time—Procedure.

Section 148 of the Civil Procedure Code, which gives the Court a general power to enlarge the period fixed or granted for the doing of any act, is applicable to a case where the plaintiff in a pre-emption suit has failed to make the deposit required by section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act within the time fixed by the Court.

The words "his plaint shall be rejected" in clause (4) of section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act read with the provisions as to an extension of time contained in the same clause, means that the plaint shall be rejected if the Court should not deem it proper to allow further time, or, if the deposit is not made within such further time as the Court may allow.

Where a plaintiff in a pre-emption suit fails to make the deposit required by section 22 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act within the time fixed by the Court, his plaint should not be rejected without affording him an opportunity to furnish an explanation of his failure to make the deposit and considering the question whether time should or should not be extended. L. Where a vendee of land is, on the date of the sale, in physical possession of the land as lessee, he cannot take physical possession of the land under the sale, within the meaning of section 30 of the Punjab Pre-emption Act, and limitation for a suit for pre-emption in respect of the sale would commence to run from the date of the mutation. L. Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act (II of 1913), s. 12—Application for redemption—Order directing redemption on payment of a certain sum—Suit for declaration by mortgagee that a larger sum is due on mortgage—Limitation.

Defendant made an application under the Punjab Redemption of Mortgages Act for redemption of a mortgage. The Collector made an order directing redemption on payment of a certain sum. The mortgagee instituted the present suit for a declaration that the charge on the land was a sum higher than that determined by the Collector and that he was entitled to retain possession of the land until the sum claimed by him was paid to him:

Held, that the position of the mortgagee in the suit was not that of a plaintiff but was more analogous to that of a defendant, the suit being virtually a defence against an order divesting the mortgagee of possession before payment of the sum due, and no question of limitation for the suit could, therefore, arise. L. Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss. 50, 77 (3) (g)—Landlord and tenant—Suit by tenant to recover possession of holding from landlord, whether cognisable by Civil or Revenue Court.

A suit by an occupancy tenant to recover possession of his holding from the landlord by whom he has been wrongfully dispossessed is cognisable only by a Revenue Court and not by a Civil Court even though brought more than one year after the date of the plaintiffs' dispossession. L. s. 59—Occupancy tenancy—Succession—Collaterals inter se rule applicable to whole blood whether excludes half blood.

While succession to an occupancy tenancy is governed by section 59 of the Tenancy Act the rights of the collaterals inter se would be governed by the relevant tribal or village custom, so that among themselves those related to the deceased in the whole blood may exclude those who are only related to him in half blood. L. ss. 77 (3) (e), proviso, 98—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Mortgage—Mortgagor retaining possession as tenant—Ejectment, suit for—Landlord and tenant, relationship of—Presumption—Procedure.

The general rule is that jurisdiction is governed by the allegations made in the plaint and not by the defence set up.

The proviso to section 77 of the Punjab Tenancy Act is mandatory and has the effect of transferring to a Revenue Court exclusive jurisdiction to decide a case which, nevertheless, so far as the allegations of the plaintiff alone are concerned, may have been rightly instituted in a Civil Court.

The jurisdiction of a Revenue Court, however, is not ousted by a pleading raised in defence.

Where a Revenue Court is confronted with a suit by a mortgagee who seeks to eject his mortgagor in the capacity of his tenant, it is for the Court to see from the plaint, the mortgage-deed, and the plaintiffs' own explanation of his case, whether he is actually the landlord, that is whether the mortgagee is actually holding under him as tenant, and to proceed with the case if it considers that this is prima facie established, but to decline jurisdiction if it is not. If it does not decline jurisdiction on this ground, and if the defendant's pleas raise an issue which it is necessary to determine for the decision of the whole suit and which strikes at the question of the status of landlord and tenant, the Revenue Court can always find on that issue itself and dismiss the suit if the defendant succeeds.

Punjab Tenancy Act—concl'd.

Such dismissal does not, however, in any way, bar the plaintiff from suing in a Civil Court on his mortgage. The finding of the Revenue Court on this issue does not constitute res judicata against the Civil Court.

Where there is not only a deed describing a mortgage as one with possession, but also a practically simultaneous deed of lease by which the mortgagor retains possession of the mortgaged land, paying what is described in the deed as rent to the mortgagee, there is a presumption that the latter is entitled to assume the capacity of landlord. P MIAN FEROEZ SHAH v. Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 72—Responsibility of Railway—Bailee.

A gun is not an explosive or dangerous when unloaded and a Railway Company is under no obligation to open a package containing an unloaded gun.

The liability of a Railway Company under section 72 of the Railways Act is that of a bailee under sections 151, 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act. The Company is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to them as a man of ordinary prudence would of his own goods and, in the absence of any special contract, they are not responsible for damage to goods. N ROHILKHUND AND KUMAON RY. ss. 72, 76—Risk Note, Form B—Consignment of goods for carriage—Loss of goods—Suit to recover value—Burden of proof.

Section 76 of the Railways Act does not apply to contracts limiting the liability of a Railway Company under section 72 of the Act.

In a suit against a Railway Company to recover the value of goods consigned to the Company for carriage under Risk Note, Form B, the plaintiff must prove that the loss of the goods was due to the wilful negligence of the Company. C EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. SUB PRASAD DUTT RAI 449 ss. 72, 76—Risk Note, Form B—Goods carried at owner's risk for portion of route and at Railway risk for remainder—Goods destroyed in transit over latter route—Damages, suit for—Burden of proof.

Plaintiff consigned certain goods for carriage to the defendant Company and paid freight for a certain section of the route at the owner's risk rate and for the rest of the route at the ordinary rate. He signed an owner's Risk Note for the entire route, but it was found that the Company had not published an owner's risk rate for the latter portion of the route. The goods were destroyed by fire while in transit over the portion of the route for which freight had been paid at the ordinary rate. In a suit by the plaintiff to recover the value of the goods:

Held, (1) that the mere fact that the plaintiff had signed an Owner's Risk Note for the entire route did not make the note applicable to that portion of the route over which the ordinary freight had been paid;

(2) that the burden lay on the defendant Company of proving that they had exercised the

In answer to a suit for compensation for non-delivery of goods consigned under Risk Note, Form B, it is sufficient for the defendant Company to plead loss as contemplated by the Risk Note, and it need not call evidence to satisfy the Court that the goods are still not in its possession.

Wilful neglect on the part of the Railway Administration or of servants is not established merely by the fact that the Company allege that the wagon in which the goods were being carried was broken into by thieves. PAT SRI NEWAS SITARAM v. EAST INDIAN RY. CO. 479

It is open to a plaintiff, who has sustained losses in respect of different consignments of different dates by reason of the negligence of a Railway Administration, to consolidate his claim and to serve the Railway with one notice, under section 77 of the Railways Act, in respect of all the losses. Where one notice is served in such a case it is a part of the "cause of action" of the plaintiff and it is impossible for him to maintain separate suits in respect of the separate losses or causes of action. Consequently, the Court-fee in such a case is chargeable on the consolidated sum of money and not the aggregate amount of fees calculated separately on the amount of each distinct loss. PAT EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. — duty of, towards Court—Receiver appointed by one Court—Another Court, whether should appoint Receiver—Leave to sue Receiver, effect of—Possession, whether surrendered by Court granting leave.

A Receiver is merely an officer of Court through whom the Court takes possession of property, the subject-matter of a litigation, and it is not for the Receiver to take up any attitude except one of absolute loyalty and obedience to the Court appointing him.

It is of the utmost importance that, where concurrent proceedings for similar relief are taken in two different and independent Courts, no order should be passed which may lead to friction or conflict of jurisdiction.

Where a Receiver has already been appointed by a Court of competent jurisdiction and has taken over possession of the properties in respect of which he has been appointed, another Court should not appoint a Receiver in respect of any portion of those properties. It is not the object of appointing a Receiver to keep a third party out of possession who may be entitled to possession; and the Court will readily give leave to sue its Receiver if satisfied that there is a case to be tried, so that the claim of the third party may be tried in the presence of the Receiver. But by giving leave to sue the Receiver, the Court does not relinquish possession of the properties to the Court in which the claim of the third party may be asserted. It retains full control and dominion over the property, though it may give leave to a stranger to sue the Receiver. PAT SIRDHAR CHOWDHRY v. MUNGNIBAM BANGAR, (1924) Pat. 54; 5 P. L. "On the said bales being received by R and then from him by L and then from him by us, we shall then and there send to you notice of arrivals. On the very date of receipt of such advice, you shall pay the balance left after deducting advance and obtain delivery of the goods. In default you are liable to pay the damages and costs incurred. If on receipt by us of advice of the arrivals of the goods we fail to give information thereof to you or make delivery of goods for which money is paid we are bound to pay to you the damages, etc., thereby incurred by you."

Some time after, the defendants gave notice to the plaintiffs that I had given them intimation that part of the goods had arrived and asked plaintiffs to pay the money and take delivery of the goods. The rights of a proprietor in the shamlat of a village are not a mere accessory to the land separately held by him, and a transfer of the latter does not ipso facto convey any rights in the former to the purchaser.

A clause in a wajib-ul-arz providing that shares in the shamlat are proportionate to the khewat lands held by each proprietor cannot confer any rights in the common land on a purchaser of khewat land to whom such rights have not been conveyed by the deed of sale. A jettison of goods which are carried on deck, even without the consent of cargo owner, does not entitle their owner to contribution unless the carriage of goods on deck is permitted by the established custom of navigation or where the other cargo owners have consented that goods jettisoned should be carried on the deck of the ship.

The office of a Bill of Lading is to provide for the rights and liabilities of the parties in reference to the contract to carry and it is not concerned with liabilities to contribution for general average.

The endorsement "at merchants' risk" on a Bill of Lading will not exempt a ship-owner from liability in a case of proper jettison but will exempt him from liability in case of an improper jettison. The words cover a case not only of improper jettison but of a loss caused by a collision and stranding owing to the negligence of the Master or crew, in fact, any act which, being done by them as servants of the ship-owner, would otherwise make him liable.

If a ship-owner wishes to introduce into his Bill of Lading so novel a clause as one exempting him from general average contribution, a clause which not only deprives the shippers of an ancient and well understood right but which might avoid his policy and deprive him also of all recourse to the under-writer he ought not only to make it clear in words but also to make it conspicuously, inserting it in such a type and in such a part of the document as that a person of ordinary capacity and care could not fail to see it. S DHARAMDAS THAWERDAS v. Where a contract for the sale of immoveable property refers the price to a valuer for him to ascertain between the parties, this fact does not of itself preclude the Court from inquiring into the adequacy of the consideration, and the inadequacy of the consideration would be strengthened as a defence to a suit for specific performance if any circumstances arise which throw a doubt on the accuracy with which the valuation is made. If the under-valuation or over-valuation is such as to convince the Court that the valuer has acted under fraud or mistake, the contract would be incapable of enforcement in equity. A HIRA LAL v. —, suit for—Contract of sale, subject to approval of Solicitors, if valid—Purchaser, if can pray for enquiry into vendors' title—Bankruptcy of plaintiff, effect of—Mutuality of contract, doctrine of, when applicable.

Specific performance—concl'd

An agreement for sale subject to the approval of the Solicitors is a perfectly valid and enforceable agreement.

It is open to the purchaser to claim an enquiry into the title of the vendor of the property, but he must accept the title as it is, if he chooses to purchase the property.

If time be made the essence of the contract, that may be waived by the conduct of the purchaser and if the time is once allowed to pass, and the parties go on negotiating for completion of the purchase then time is no longer of the essence of the contract.

But a mere extension of time, and nothing more, is only a waiver to the extent of substituting the extended time for the original time, and not an utter destruction of the essential character of the time.

If a plaintiff (purchaser) in a suit for specific performance becomes a bankrupt before the institution of the suit, he cannot have the contract enforced specifically. But it is otherwise if he becomes bankrupt after his suit has been decreed and the purchase-money is deposited by him.

There is no authority for holding that the principle of mutuality applicable to suits for specific performance of contracts before the institution of a suit, applies to the parties after the suit has been decreed and the money has been deposited by the purchaser before he becomes a bankrupt. C KAMAL KRISHNA KUNDU CHOWDHURY v. Contract to grant lease—Specific performance—Compensation in money, whether adequate—Intention of Legislature.

The Legislature did not intend that persons who entered into contracts to transfer or lease immovable property should be allowed to escape from them to suit their own convenience by alleging that the person in whose favour the contract was made could be compensated in money. The Explanation to section 12 of the Specific Relief Act requires the Court to presume that such compensation cannot be adequate unless and until the contrary is presumed. A BRIJ BALLAB DAS v. MAHABIR PRASAD, 10 O. & A. L. R. 394 167 ss. 15, 16, 17, 27 (b)—Contract by guardian for himself and minor—Specific performance of whole or part, whether can be decreed—Mutuality, want of, effect of.

The operation of section 27 (4) of the Specific Relief Act is confined to cases where the contract is, in the first instance, enforceable as against the parties to the contract. The liability of a person claiming under a party to the contract rests upon the antecedent liability of the party to the contract under whom he claims, and arises by reason of the fact that as such transferee he takes subject to the transferors' pre-existing contractual obligation. But where there is no pre-existing contractual obligation, the case entirely fails against the transferee.

The Court will not, as a general rule, compel specific performance of a contract unless it can execute the whole contract. It may be that the contract though in form one and entire, is in substance divisible, and where this is so there is nothing to prevent the Court from carrying into effect that portion of it, in substance a separate contract, which is capable of being carried into effect. But a contract for the sale of immovable property in one lot will generally be considered indivisible.

A contract to be specifically enforced by the Court must, as a general rule, be mutual, that is to say, such that it might, at the time it was entered into, have been enforced by either of the parties against the other of them. Want of mutuality in the contract is a well recognized defence to a suit for specific performance.

When, therefore, whether from personal incapacity to contract or the nature of the contract, or any other cause, the contract is incapable of being enforced against one party, that party is, generally, incapable of enforcing it against the other, though its execution in the latter way might in itself be free from the difficulty attending its execution in the former.

Where a person is jointly interested in an estate with another person and purports to deal with the entire estate, specific performance will not be granted against him as to his share.

The relief of declaration is more or less a discretionary relief, and the Courts are not ordinarily prepared to grant such relief where it would be only by way of anticipation or where the main heads of the plaintiff's complaint failed.

For instance, where in a suit for a declaration of plaintiff's character as a reversioner and an injunction to restrain waste by the defendant, who is the widow of the last male holder, the plaintiff fails to make out a case of waste, the declaratory relief will not be granted. N JEMMAL v. Once Probate is taken out by an executor all intermediate acts which he has done in connection with the estate of the testator are validated.

Certain tenants borrowed money from the Government as takavi. This was sought to be realised by attachment of the rent said to have been payable to the borrowers by their sub-tenants. The latter protested that they had paid up the rent and nothing was due from them, but their application was dismissed in default. The alleged debt was then put to auction and was purchased by the plaintiff who brought a suit to recover the amount from the sub-tenants. It was found that the latter had paid up the rent previous to the attachment:

Held, that the suit was liable to be dismissed as there was no guarantee that the debt purchased by the plaintiff was actually due and the dismissal of the defendants' protest did not in any way operate to bar their plea of payment in answer to the suit. A SOBHA RAM v. RAM PRANAD 373

By an arrangement entered into between a Hindu widow and the next reversioner of her husband it was agreed that the latter should remain in possession of certain property as trustee for the widow during his lifetime, without power of alienation and that the widow should receive a certain sum as maintenance. It was further provided that, after the reversioner's death, the property should go to his sons, if any should survive, and in default of sons it should go to the widow. The reversioner made an alienation during his lifetime, and after his death the widow brought a suit for possession of the property against the transferees of the reversioner's trustee describing the reversioner as a trustee and stating that the cause of action had accrued to her on the death of the reversioner. The Trial Court dismissed the suit as time-barred. In appeal allowed. Held, (1) that the arrangement entered into between the widow and the reversioner was perfectly legal and did not offend against any of the provisions of Chapter II of the Transfer of Property Act; (2) that the reversioner being merely a life-tenant, the widow's right to claim possession accrued on his death and limitation began to run from the date of his death; (3) that the widow was entitled to put forward an alternative view of her case before the Appellate Court as it was based on the allegations which were contained in the plaint. A DURA KUNWAR v. A transfer of all the rights of the vendee under a contract to sell land, even after the vendor has refused to perform the contract is not a transfer of a mere right to sue, although a right to sue is involved in it. The vendee or his transferee has still the right to enforce specific performance of the contract, in spite of the breach by the vendor. The law of India in respect of breaches of contract for sale of immovable property differs from that of England, and the ordinary rule as to the measure of damages laid down in section 73 of the Contract Act applies to such breaches, the measure of damages being the difference between the contract price and the market value of the land on the date of breach.

In a suit to recover damages for breach of a contract to sell immovable property, the plaintiff has no power to postpone the date of the breach of contract to that on which he demanded a conveyance for the last time. LAKHTAR BEG v. HAQ NAWAZ 87

In cases falling under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act the estoppel rests on the representation made by a transferor that he is "authorised to transfer", which representation subsequently turns out to be erroneous. But when the truth of the matter is known to both parties there can be no estoppel.

Where a person having no title to the land purports to mortgage it to one who is fully aware of the absence of title in the mortgage, and the latter subsequently acquires an interest in the same property by inheritance, such interest cannot be made the subject of mortgage under section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Held, that the mortgagee was entitled to a decree for the full amount of the mortgage against defendant No. 2 and was entitled, on the principle laid down in section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act, to enforce it against the one-fourth of the property to which defendant No. 2 had succeeded. A AISHA BIBI v. The two essential constituents of a real sale are the transfer of ownership and the payment or promise of payment of price; a transaction from which either of these is absent is not a sale at all.

Therefore, a sale-deed which recites that the vendee has already spent a thousand rupees on the vendor's litigation and that the vendor has "this day" received another thousand rupees and deposited the money with the vendee for defraying the further costs of the same litigation, and purports to make a transfer of ownership for a price paid and not for a price promised or part-paid and part-promised does not satisfy more than half the definition of a sale and is not a sale at all. N HEMRAJ v. s. 55 (2)—Sale—Covenant for title whether implied in Punjab.

The Transfer of Property Act is not in force in the Punjab. Its provisions are no doubt useful guides in deciding points of equity and are frequently so applied by the Courts of this Province, but there is no obligation upon the Courts so to use the Act as if every particular detail of it was the law of the Province.

The question whether the broad principle contained in section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act is to be applied to a particular case in the Punjab depends upon the facts of that case.

Plaintiff purchased a house from the defendant which the latter had purchased at an insolvency sale, of which the plaintiff was aware. A third person subsequently established his right to one-half of the house and plaintiff was deprived of that portion. Thereupon he brought the present suit to recover the purchase-money which he had paid to the defendant :

Held, that as the plaintiff was aware that the defendant had purchased the house at an insolvency sale he must have known that the latter was conveying to him the interest which he had acquired in the auction and that the plaintiff was to stand at his shoes;

that, therefore, equity did not demand that the Court should presume a covenant for title in favour of the plaintiff. L DULA SINGH v. BELA SINGH 374

The mortgagee sued on the basis of the mortgage and obtained a decree making the purchaser personally liable after the sale of the property :

Held, that as the plaintiff was no party to the sale-deed he could not take advantage of the undertaking given by the purchaser to the mortgagor and his suit was, therefore, liable to be dismissed. PAT KAMTA PRASAD SINGH v. NANKU PRASAD SINGH 545

Held, that the transfer was a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of section 58 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act.

Each document must be construed with the aid of the language used therein and such other surrounding circumstances as may be relevant to the question of construction, and precedents can be referred to only in so far as they lay down any general principle of interpretation.

It was further provided that in the event of the buyer refusing to transfer the property to the seller the latter may deposit the money in Court :

Held, that the deed of transfer and the agreement taken together constituted a mortgage by conditional sale within the meaning of section 58 (c) of the Transfer of Property Act. O Mahabir v. Bharath Bihari, 11 O. L. J. 312 425

Default was made and the mortgagees brought a suit to recover possession of the mortgaged properties :

Held, that the only decree which could properly be passed in the suit would be one allowing the mortgagor to redeem the property on payment of the sum due within a time to be fixed by the Court and in default to direct that possession of the mortgaged property be delivered to the plaintiffs.

A mortgagee can enforce his rights under a mortgage only consistently with, and not in derogation of, the rights of the mortgagor under the same transaction. O Bakhtawar Singh v. Bakhtawar Singh 232

— s. 68—Mortgage suit—Money decree.

One of the reliefs claimed in a mortgage suit asked for a direction to make the amount due under the mortgage-bond a charge upon the surplus sale-proceeds of one of the mortgaged properties which had been sold. Towards the end of the paragraph it was stated that the balance of the decretal amount may be ordered to be realised from the property and the person of the defendant or defendants who may be liable. The Court refused a mortgage decree and passed a decree under section 68 of the Transfer of Property Act in the following terms :—"The suit for Rs. 5,877-10-0 with proportionate costs be decreed in terms of relief 5 of the plaint. He is further declared to have a charge on the surplus sale-proceeds which is in deposit in the Collectorate. I allow interest on the sum decreed at Rs. 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realisation of the same."

Held, that only that portion of the relief No. 5 of the plaint was granted by the decree which related to the creation of a charge on the surplus sale-proceeds with respect to the amount due under the mortgage-bond, and that the decree did not by implication include a direction that the balance of the decretal amount could be recovered from the persons and properties of the defendants who were purchasers of the mortgaged properties and were not expressly made personally liable under the decree. Pat Kishendro Singh v. Mere general words are insufficient to create a charge on property either moveable or immoveable if it is not specifically indicated. A covenant that the obligee should recover from the "person and property" of the debtor is too wide to fasten a charge on any of his property.

A mere covenant to charge an estate does not create a charge unless the property can be identified by existing facts and circumstances so that there may be no ambiguity about them. There must be expression of a present intention coupled with the necessary words of hypothecation in order to constitute it.

Transfer of Property Act—concl'd.

A lease is a transfer of property and can be made only by the transferor and not by the transferee. The transfer can only be made by the volition of the transferor, but in the case of a lease for a term exceeding one year the transfer does not become effective until a registered instrument comes into being; the instrument must, however, be effected by the transferor.

Therefore, a registered kabuliyat executed by the person occupying the premises and accepted by the person owning the premises is not sufficient to bestow a title upon the person occupying the premises and can in no way be considered a lease as defined in section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. A KEDAR NATH v. A contract stipulating for a month's notice without any specification of the time when the notice is to expire, is a contract to the contrary within the meaning of section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act and in such a case it is not necessary that the notice should expire with the month of the tenancy. N SAIK KASAM v. HAJI YUSUF KARIM ANU 445

— s. 106—Landlord and tenant—Agreement to vacate at specified time—Notice to quit, whether necessary—Tenant holding over, who is—Dissent of landlord.

Where a tenant agrees to give up possession at a particular time, he is not entitled to a notice to quit under section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, as that section has no applicability to such a case.

There must be absence of both assent and dissent on the part of the landlord to constitute a tenant, a tenant on sufferance or as one holding over. Where there is express dissent by the landlord, for instance, by refusal to accept rent, the tenant cannot claim to be holding over. N DINA SINGH v. JAMAL SINGH 446

Trust—Illusory trust—Performance of religious ceremonies, effect of—Trust, essentials of—Dharmasala, what is—Administration of assets—Executor—Assets converted into building, effect of—Money borrowed by executor—Executor, liability of, nature of—Building constructed partly out of assets, ownership of.

The term dharmasala means a place where a certain section of the public can claim residence as of right without any payment. A building in the nature of a public boarding-house does not convey the idea of dharmasala.

The performance of the hawan ceremony on the occasion of the laying of the foundation stone of a building will not turn an illusory trust in respect of the building into a definite one.

Trust—concl'd.

As the execution of a trust is under the control of the Court the trust must be of such a nature that it can be under the control of the Court, and at its administration can be reviewed by the Court, or, if the trustee dies, the Court itself can execute the trust.

Where an executor invests a portion of the assets of the deceased in constructing a building, an administrator who succeeds the executor can claim the building as part of the assets.

Except in certain special cases, upon a contract of borrowing made by an executor after the death of the testator, the executor is only liable personally and cannot be sued as executor so as to get execution against the assets of the testator.

Where a building is constructed by an executor out of the assets of the deceased together with money belonging to or borrowed by himself, the building becomes the property of the deceased and the executor in proportion to the money belonging to each spent thereon. O ANANT RAM v. Trusts Act (II of 1882), s. 5—Trust relating to immoveable property, creation of, mode of.

Under section 5 of the Trusts Act a trust relating to immoveable property must be declared by a non-testamentary instrument in writing signed by the author of the trust or the trustee and registered, or by the Will of the author of the trust or trustee. O ANANT RAM v. ISRI PRASAD 320

Trustee, office of, whether transferable—Property not dissociable from office of trustee—Alienation of such property, validity of.

The office of trustee is incapable of transfer. Therefore, where it is impossible to dissociate the office of trustee from the possession of property, the transfer of property virtually amounts to parting with the office, and such an alienation cannot be recognised.

Ex-proprietary tenant—Order fixing rent based on agreement, whether binding on heirs of tenant.

An order fixing the rent of an ex-proprietary holding is binding on the heirs of the ex-proprietary tenant even if it merely adopted an agreement between the landlord and the ex-proprietary tenant. A MUSADDI LAL v. OHROTU 349

— ss. 40, 57—Entry in Revenue Record, correction of—Possession, basis of—Title, question of—Plot entered as sir—Entry, whether open to disproof.

Under section 40 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act where the Revenue Authorities can find that a certain person is in possession the entry must be made on the basis of possession and the question can be re-opened on a basis of title in either a Civil or a Revenue Court.

Where land has been recorded as sir at the last settlement and has been continuously so recorded since, the correctness of the entry is open to disproof under section 57 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. A LALMAN v. FAZAL MUHAMMAD KHAN 115

— ss. 87, 88—Commutation of rent—Suit to recover arrears of rent—Court, whether bound by entry in Revenue papers.

In rent suits in the Revenue Courts against occupancy tenants the Courts must award rent at the rates which are fixed upon the papers unless those rates are entered erroneously by a clerical mistake; and where there is a binding order of some competent authority, such as an order by the Settlement Officer under sections 87 and 88 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, or under sections 43 to 46 of the Agra Tenancy Act, the Court has no discretion but must allow the rent at the rates directed. If either the landlord or the tenant has any objection to those rates he must apply to the proper authorities to have those rates altered, but a Court trying a suit for arrears of rent has no authority in the matter. A YAQUB ALI v. — s. 233K, applicability of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Estoppel—Partition—Co-sharer, permitting another person to remain recorded as co-sharer and participate in partition proceedings—Representation.

Per Stuart, J.—Section 233 K of the U. P. Land Revenue Act ordinarily operates only as against those recorded co-sharers who have been parties to the partition proceedings.

A Muhammadan tenant-in-common cannot be held to be represented in partition proceedings by another Muhammadan tenant-in-common merely because their interests are identical.

U. P. Land Revenue Act—concl.

Where, however, a co-sharer permits another person to continue recorded as a co-sharer in respect of property which belongs to the former and to participate in partition proceedings as a co-sharer, he is estopped from subsequently objecting to the proceedings on the ground that he was not a party to them or had no notice of them.

Per Mukerji, J.—The rule of estoppel by substantial representation is based on broad principles. The rule applies with great force in the case of a Hindu family because of the constitution of it, but it would apply in other cases also provided the facts are sufficient for its support.

Courts are to dispense justice, and rules of procedure should not be allowed to defeat the ends of justice. A KARIM BAKHSI v. WAHAJUDDIN, 22 A. L. J. 73; 46 A. 214; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 427 1035

Wakf—Dedication, proof of—Installation of idol or construction of temple, whether necessary.

The name given to a deity is only a sacred convention. The deity is supposed or believed to exist from eternity. The idol is virtually treated as a visible symbol of the deity in whose favour the dedication is made or by whom the purchase is to be effected; and the mere fact that the installation takes place afterwards does not affect the validity of the dedication or of the purpose for which the purchase is made.

A certain village was purchased in the name of an idol and the income derived from the village was used for the purposes of worship of the idol and other charitable purposes. Idols bearing the name mentioned in the sale-deed were also purchased, but there was no formal installation of the idols and no temple was built for them:

Held, that there was a sufficient dedication of the village to the idol and the village had become wakf property. A SARAB SUKH DAS v. RAM PRASAD, 46 A. 130; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 357 1018

Will—Bequest for "Dharmaoo Kam" whether void for uncertainty—Hindu Law—Registered Will whether can be varied by unregistered document.

A bequest for dharmaoo kam is void for uncertainty.

[Indian and English case law on the subject reviewed and discussed.]

The law does not require a compulsory registration of a Will by a Hindu. There is, therefore, no bar to its terms being varied by an unregistered document, even if it be a registered Will. S SHAMBAI v. GOYERDHAN 249

-- Construction Earlier clause clear and unambiguous. Later clause ambiguous—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 35—Devise of property belonging to legatee—Legatee retaining his property in his own title—Election—Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), ss. 128, 130—Demonstrative—Legacy—Interest—Suit for account by residuary legatee against other legatee—Defendant suppressing account-books—Burden of proof.

The principle that the later clause of a Will should have preference over the earlier is inapplicable to a case where the earlier clause is clear and unambiguous and can be read in such manner as not to interfere with the later one.

A testator has no right to devise property belonging to another person, but if he does devise such property and at the same time leaves a legacy for that person the latter must acquiesce in the devise if he wishes to receive the legacy. But if he chooses to retain his property by virtue of his own title, under the doctrine of election he is not entitled to the legacy under the Will.

A demonstrative legacy which partakes partly of the nature of a specific legacy and partly of a general legacy and which is directed to be paid out of a certain specified property bears interest from one year after the testator's death even in cases where no provision for interest is made in the Will, notwithstanding that the Probate and

In a suit for accounts by a residuary legatee against other legatees if it appears that the defendants had seized a large portion of the testator's property, were in possession of the accounts kept by the testator and were suppressing the same, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to prove each item of property he claims beyond the possibility of doubt, but if he makes a prima facie case the burden is cast upon the defendants to show that the property did not belong to the testator or was subsequently accounted for. M. ----- Gift—Construction of document—Will or gift.

If, under a document purporting to be a gift and handed over to the alleged donee, the donee gets nothing until the death of the donor, there is no disposal of any immediate rights of possession or any immediate interest in the property, the document is a Will and not a deed of gift.

The fact that the document purports to reserve a life-interest in the property to the donor is not a decisive circumstance against its being a Will. M. VENKATACHALAM CHETTY v. GOVINDASWAMY NATICKER, 46 M. L. J. 288; 19 L. W. 434; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 605 156
